Overseas Domestic Workers

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overseas domestic workers have been deported from the United Kingdom each year since 1980 as a result of leaving the employ of visitors with whom they were originally admitted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not separately identified and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long a domestic worker must have been in the employ of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom to be admitted as a visitor together with their employer; and what checks are carried out in the employer's country of origin.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under current arrangements there is no minimum qualifying period. Under the new arrangements announced by my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Ferrers in another place on 24 July at columns 1449-50, which are to take effect shortly, a domestic worker must have been in continuous paid employment with the employer abroad for at least 12 months before accompanying or joining a visitor here. Entry clearance will be required in all cases so that the bona fides of the arrangement can be checked before the domestic worker sets out for the United Kingdom.

Channel 3

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the balance between the number of large and the number of small independent Channel 3 television companies; what proposals he has regarding the ownership of contiguous franchises; what consultations have taken place recently with the interests involved; when such consultations were initiated; and when they are expected to be concluded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department announced proposals for the content of the supplementary ownership rules to be made under powers in the Broadcasting Act 1990 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 4 December at columns 85-87. The draft order, which is subject to affirmative resolution by both Houses of Parliament, will be laid as soon as possible.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policy he announced during the 1989-90 Session of Parliament during proceedings on the Broadcasting Bill in respect of the ownership of contiguous Channel 3 franchises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Ministers indicated during the passage of the Broadcasting Bill that they envisaged that no one person should be allowed to own two large Channel 3 franchises, or two franchises for contiguous areas, except in circumstances where one area had become non-viable and only the adjacent licensee was prepared to take over the area in question. But this was in the context of the underlying policy objectives that the separate regional identities of individual Channel 3 licence areas should be preserved, and that regional programming obligations should be fully discharged. In the light of the strengthening of the regional requirements in the Bill, and of our decision to designate nine of the 15 licence areas as "large" for these purposes, we concluded that it was no longer necessary to provide for an additional restriction on ownership to contiguous licences.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent by his Department on public safety campaigns encouraging the use of domestic smoke alarms in each of the last five years; how much money is budgeted for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Home Office first carried out publicity specifically related to smoke alarms in the financial year 1987-88. A breakdown of expenditure for that year and all subsequent years is given in the table.

£ million

Year	Advertising	Other publicity (including print)	Total
1987-88	0·50	0·041	0·541
1988-89	0·55	0·115	0·665
1989-90	1·00	0·091	1·091
[1]1990-91	1·05	0·109	1·159

[1] Estimated.

In 1987, before the Home Office carried out any publicity, research indicated that ownership of domestic smoke alarms in England and Wales was at 6 per cent. Following the national advertising carried out in January 1990, research indicated that ownership had increased to 35 per cent. The Home Office has a target of increasing ownership to 70 per cent. by 1994.

Prison Places

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places are currently provided in Her Majesty's prisons; and what is the total prison population at the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The uncrowded capacity of the prison estate in England and Wales on Friday 14 December 1990 was 44,346, but this figure includes accommodation temporarily taken out of use for refurbishment. The prison population on the same date was 44,911, including 674 prisoners held in police cells.

Trevi Group

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of the meetings of Trevi and European Community Immigration Ministers in Rome on 6 and 7 December.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The meeting of Trevi Ministers endorsed the good progress made under the Italian presidency in developing further measures to strengthen practical police co-operation, in particular as regards work towards the creation of a European drugs intelligence unit, work on the establishment of a European police information system to help combat the most serious forms of crime, and an initiative to provide joint training to police officers from drug producer and transit countries which has already resulted in a three-week pilot course. We also agreed in principle to the establishment of a permanent secretariat for Trevi, and asked for detailed work on this to be carried out during the Luxembourg presidency.

The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration was the ninth in the series of meetings held towards the end of each presidency since 1986 and the first which I have myself attended. Ministers had before them a report from senior officials which set out the work undertaken during the Italian presidency.

In particular, we welcomed the progress that had been made on the draft convention on the crossing of the external borders of the member states of the Community and invited the ad hoc group on immigration to complete consideration of the remaining issues. We also invited the ad hoc group to consider what measures are necessary to implement article 8A of the treaty of Rome as regards frontiers. Both my predecessor and I have continued to make clear during the Italian presidency the United Kingdom's profound reservation as to the complete abolition of immigration controls at internal Community borders. We shall, however, participate actively in the study of measures for the implementation of article 8A.

Ministers also discussed the question of migration from central and eastern Europe in readiness for the Council of Europe ministerial conference to be held in Vienna in January 1991.

Prisoners (Underpants)

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many changes of underpants male prisoners are given each week; and whether there are any plans to increase this.

Mrs. Rumbold: Current issue scales allow for a minimum of two changes of underpants each week.

Following a review of the range and style of prison clothing, this is being increased to a minimum of four changes a week through a phased programme between January and the end of 1991. The first inmates to benefit will be those in establishments in Kent and the north-east.

Human Rights (European Bodies)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's Government intend to renew their acceptance of the right of individual petition to the European Commission of Human Rights and of the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have decided to renew for a period of five years from 14 January 1991 our acceptance of the right of individual petition to the European Commission of Human Rights and of the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights.

Suicide Prevention

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has given consideration to the development programmes involving voluntary organisations such as the Samaritans in suicide prevention schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has grant-aided the Samaritans for several years. The grant in the current year is £155,000; we therefore know and support their valuable work in assisting those considering suicide.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received urging him to exempt from value added tax the provision of home care goods and services.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have received a number of representations on this matter, but, owing to the constraints of EC VAT law, are unable to exempt domiciliary care unless it is provided by a charity or public body.

Income Tax

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will seek to make special arrangements for those returning United Kingdom hostages and refugees from Kuwait and Iraq whose expected entitlement to income tax exemptions has been lost because they have been obliged to return to the United Kingdom early.

Mr. Maude: I am considering this matter carefully in the light of information about the particular circumstances of those affected by the Gulf crisis.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in Her Majesty's Treasury. Estimates are, however, made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold (currently £250). However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972 in which the Treasury participated an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

London Weighting

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) for what reasons London weighting for civil servants has not been altered for the last two years;

(2) whether he intends to increase London weighting for civil servants;

(3) whether the civil servants' claim for additional London weighting will be submitted for independent arbitration;

(4) whether it is his intention to end London weighting payments to civil servants.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's general policy is that pay should be based on what is required to recruit, retain and motivate within what is affordable. Over the past two years, over £87 million has been spent enhancing London pay, in addition to national pay increases. This represents an increase of over 50 per cent. in the London element of the pay bill. The money has been spent on special London pay points for most civil servants in the capital and on local pay additions which focus on particular locations experiencing recruitment and retention difficulties. Unlike London weighting, both are targeted to ensure that public money is used most cost-effectively. Over the past two years, recruitment and retention rates in London have improved very significantly.

Against this background, there was no justification for an additional across-the-board increase in London weighting in either 1989 or 1990. The Government's intention is to continue the policy of setting London pay in accordance with what is required to recruit, retain and motivate and, where appropriate, to target increases in the London element of pay to ensure that they produce the best value for money for the taxpayer. There are no plans to end London weighting.

I have agreed to meet the Council of Civil Service Unions in the new year to discuss its request for arbitration on its 1990 London weighting claim.

House Owners (Relief)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show (a) the quantities of relief during 1989-90 that was accounted for by house owners who in that year did not either move or enter the tenure and (b) the quantum of relief provided to 1989-90 first-time purchasers during that year.

Mr. Maude: This information is not available.

National Savings

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals to make about the method of calculating repayments of National Savings products.

Mr. Maples: National Savings practice is to date repayments at the expected date of receipt by customers. This has also been the date used for valuing the amounts to be repaid or for other rights, such as participation in premium bond prize draws. In this way customers benefit from their savings until the date they are expected to receive their money.

National Savings has now received new legal advice on the regulations governing savings certificates, premium bonds and the National Savings bank ordinary account. This is that repayments should be determined at the date of posting, not the date of receipt.

For premium bonds, National Savings has therefore changed its administrative practice to fit with the regulations without any disadvantage to customers.

For savings certificates and ordinary account, if National Savings had valued the repayment warrants at the date they were posted rather than the expected date of receipt, many customers would have been deprived of their final increments, bonuses and other benefits. These additional payments for savings certificates are estimated at £300 million—this is not a precise figure as over 70 years of transactions are involved. National Savings will not be seeking to recover any of the payments made to customers as the amounts paid to them were in accordance with long-standing practice and customers' expectations.

The Government intend to seek parliamentary authority in the next Finance Bill to validate the payments that have been made out of the national loans fund, the Consolidated Fund and the National Savings bank ordinary deposits. Meanwhile payments in accordance with current practice—which is to the benefit of savers —will continue to be made pending the necessary provisions in the Finance Bill.

For the future, National Savings intends to continue the practice which has meant that customers receive payment as near as possible to the date they expect it. National Savings is considering with its legal advisers what consequential changes should be made to the relevant regulations. Amending regulations will be laid as soon as practicable.

A small number of past customers have legal entitlements to additional payments. First, some customers who had their index-linked certificates repaid at a time that was affected by a fall in the RPI would have received a larger payment, averaging £1·50, if the certificates had been valued at the date of posting. National Savings is sending the extra payments with interest to compensate for delay to all the holders concerned.

Secondly, some premium bond holders become entitled to an increased prize, or a new prize. This is because under the new legal interpretation of the regulations, some winning bonds were ineligible for inclusion in the relevant prize draws as they should have been treated as having been repaid earlier. National Savings is writing to all new premium bond prize winners. They will be paid their prizes plus compensation for the delay.

The additional amount now to be paid out in premium bond prizes and to holders of index-linked certificates, together with compensation for these late payments, is estimated at £300,000. This will not add to planned public expenditure. National Savings is issuing a press release today giving further details of its current practice and of the consequences of the new legal advice. I have placed copies in the Library.

Third-world Countries

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in pursuing, with other members of the Paris Club, the proposals made by the previous Chancellor of the Exchequer on 19 September to improve concessions made to third-world countries and the Toronto terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 17 December 1990]: The United Kingdom's Trinidad proposals are currently being discussed by the members of the Paris Club as part of a general review of the treatment of the poorest, highly indebted countries. Naturally, other creditors have ideas of their own, many of which would be complementary to the United Kingdom proposals. It is too early to say what the result of the review will be. However, we remain confident that a new package incorporating many of the important features of the Trinidad terms will be agreed during 1991.

Poland

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current economic balance between the United Kingdom and Poland; and if he has any proposals to alleviate the burden of debt upon Poland.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 17 December 1990]: United Kingdom exports to Poland in 1990 H1 were $142 million. United Kingdom imports from Poland during 1990 H1 were $310 million. The Paris Club of official bilateral creditors is currently working with the Polish authorities in order to find a long-term solution to the Polish debt problem. United Kingdom officials are taking an active and constructive role in these discussions.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for discontinuation of the leasing by borough or district councils of private houses for temporary accommodation for homeless persons; what consultation he has had with boroughs principally affected; and what study he has made concerning the effects of implementing his proposal.

Mr. Yeo: On 22 October 1990, the Department consulted all local housing authorities about proposals for housing revenue account subsidy in 1991-92. There was no proposal to discontinue leasing. We are now considering the responses received as a result of our consultations and final decisions will be made shortly.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for action in relation to homeless single people in London, additional to that announced in his reply of 22 June, Official Report, column 752.

Sir George Young [pursuant to the reply, 26 November 1990, c. 256-57]: I am announcing today that I have given the go-ahead for 1,000 new bedspaces in hostel and long-term accommodation under the single homelessness initiative to tackle rough sleeping in central London. The new hostel spaces will be run by front-line voluntary groups.

We are working on this high priority task in close co-operation with voluntary organisations. I am delighted that Nick Hardwick, director of Centrepoint, Soho, is to be working closely on this project with me. Together we will be developing strategies to ensure particularly that people sleeping in concentrations such as those in London's Bullring and Victoria will make use of the hostels that are available to them.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department had, before announcing proposals to reduce the 100 per cent. subsidy for leasing housing from private landlords, on the likely increase in the number of families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in (a) London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Yeo: It is for local authorities to decide what type of temporary accommodation to use to meet their homelessness duties. Local authorities report to my Department on a quarterly basis the number of homeless households they have placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. As there is considerable variation between areas in the use made of such accommodation, my Department does not make forecasts of likely future usage.

National Parks (Fencing)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any intention to amend planning regulations to restrict high fencing in national park areas.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the restrictions on the natural movements of deer in the area of Bury hill, near Dulverton, caused by the erection of a high deer-proof fence; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the fence in question has been erected on one boundary of Barlynch wood under the provisions of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. I understand that it does not prevent access by other routes. I do not propose to intervene.

Office of Water Services

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of staff employed by the Office of Water Services; what are their terms of reference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Water Act 1989 established the Office of Water Services as an independent Government Department under the Director General of Water Services, who was appointed by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales. Its main tasks are to enforce the new system of economic regulation of the industry and to protect the interests of customers. Its organisation and staffing are matters for the director general. An account of its initial period of operation was given in the director general's annual report which was laid before the House on 19 June and a copy of which is in the Library.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to approve derelict land grant for the purposes of desilting Lymm dam in Cheshire.

Mr. Yeo: No. The dam in its present state is attractive, open to public access and provides a natural habitat. Desilting it cannot be regarded as high in regional priorities.

Water Companies (Charging)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, if he will set out the statutory requirements there are on water companies to take cognisance of the outcome of the consultation currently being undertaken by the Director General of Water Services on methods of charging.

Mr. Baldry: The Water Act 1989 contains a prohibition on charging by rateable values which will not take effect until the year 2000. Otherwise it is for each company to decide what method to adopt, subject to the obligations placed on it in its instrument of appointment, in particular the avoidance of undue discrimination against and undue preference for any class of customers or potential customers. I understand that the Director General of Water Services hopes to produce from the consultation process which he has initiated some guidelines and criteria which will help the water companies to formulate their future charging policies.

Integrated Pollution Control

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is making to ensure proper liaison between the various regulatory bodies involved in the control of those processes covered by integrated pollution control.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the division of responsibility between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the National Rivers Authority for the sampling of industrial discharges has been settled without diminution of the National Rivers Authority's legislative rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has recently signed two memoranda of understanding, one with the Health and Safety Executive and the other with the National Rivers Authority.

These memoranda are designed to ensure effective co-ordination of the regulation of plant subject to control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The memorandum with the Health and Safety Executive is concerned with the interface between the two organisations in respect of discharges, primarily those to air, and issues arising from the protection of persons at work and the public under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The memorandum with the National Rivers Authority deals with issues relating to discharges to water.

Copies of both memoranda have been placed in the Library of the House.

River Severn (Sewage Treatment)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by water authority, the sewage treatment works which are allowed by derogation, to discharge raw sewage or partly treated sewage in the River Severn and its tributaries.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Effluent discharges from sewage treatment works operated by the water service companies are subject to control by the National Rivers Authority under the provisions of the Water Act 1989. There are no derogations from these controls. Particulars of consents granted for discharges into the River Severn, its tributaries and the Severn estuary are entered on the public registers which are available for inspection at the relevant regional offices of the National Rivers Authority.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grant he has approved in connection with the improvement of permanent traveller caravan sites in Bradford; and how many additional pitches are to be provided under the improvement plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Phase I improvements for the Mary street site in Bradford were given approval in February 1988 in the sum of £183,449. The works were to improve the existing site and to provide eight new pitches. They have now been completed.

Phase II and III improvements to the same site were approved in October 1990 in the sum of £643,506. These works will produce further site improvements and an additional four new pitches, bringing the total pitches on this site to 28.

I understand that Bradford city council will also shortly be submitting an application for improvements to the Esholt lane site at Baildon.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances he can withdraw designation agreed under the caravans Act; in what circumstances a local authority granted designation can request him to withdraw or rescind designation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 December 1990]: The Secretary of State may designate a local authority under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 when he considers that adequate sites for gipsies are provided in its area, or that it is not necessary or expedient to make such provision. He may revoke the designation order, by further order, either on the formal application of the authority which made the original application, or without such an application.

It is open to anybody to seek to persuade the Secretary of State that the circumstances in which the designation order was made are no longer applicable, and that the order should thus be revoked.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information has been supplied to his Department about the extent of permanent caravan site provision for travellers established or planned by each local authority in Yorkshire and Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 December 1990]: From the information supplied annually to my Department by local authorities, the extent of permanent caravan site provision for travellers by local authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside is as follows:

Authority and site	Number of pitches
Humberside
Beverley (Harland Way, Cottingham)	26

City of Sheffield Metropolitan District Council
Wakefield Metropolitan District Council

In addition, officers of the Department have had discussions with the following authorities where further gipsy site proposals are at an early stage:

Metropolitan Borough of Calderdale
Doncaster Metropolitan Borough Council
Kirklees Metropolitan Council

Leeds City Council
City of Sheffield Metropolitan Council

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with representatives of organisations concerning the designation of Bradford under the caravans Act; what discussions he intends holding to discuss this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Bradford metropolitan district was designated under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968, with effect from 30 May 1990. I have not held discussions subsequently with any organisations concerning this designation and have no plans to do so.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gold (Iraq and Kuwait)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the amount of gold held by financial institutions in Iraq on 2 August and of the amount which now remains in Kuwait or Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iraqi economy has been on a war footing for nearly a decade, and very little authoritative information has been disclosed. No useful estimate can therefore be made.

Financial Assets (Kuwait)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the liquid assets which have been removed from Kuwait since the Iraqi invasion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Until the illegal occupation of Kuwait is terminated and the legitimate Government restored we have no basis on which to make meaningful estimates.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the value of the Kuwaiti currency currently blocked.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to give a precise estimate of the value of Kuwaiti currency currently blocked by sanctions.

Entry Clearance Officers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by how many the number of entry clearance officers at the post in Bangladesh has been reduced in the past year, to date; what further plans there are to reduce the number of entry clearance officers; what effect the reductions in staff will have in applicant waiting times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During 1990 the post at Dhaka has been reduced by five entry clearance officers of whom four were redeployed to other Indian sub-continent posts where queues were longer. Staffing levels are kept under continual review. The staff savings were achieved through increased productivity which had reduced applicant waiting times. These are now expected to remain roughly constant at the following levels:

Queue	Months

Settlement queues are organised as follows:

(Q1) Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
(Q2) All spouses; all children under 18 years.
(Q3) Fiance(e)s and others applying for first time settlement.
(Q4) Re-applicants.

Romanian Orphans

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will issue instructions to the entry clearance section in the British embassy in Bucharest to expedite the documentation required by prospective adoptive parents of Romanian orphans so that their entry clearance certificates may be issued before 19 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British embassy in Bucharest processes entry clearance applications relating to the adoption of Romanian children as quickly as possible. There is no scope for expediting the process further. In any case, prospective adopters should not be unduly delayed by the holiday season, since we understand that the Romanian courts will close only on 24 and 25 December and 1 and 2 January.

Middle East

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in the middle east as between Israel and its Arab neighbouring states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The cycle of violence in Israel and the occupied territories demonstrates how important it is to retain a process which will bring peace between Israel and her neighbours, including the Palestinians. This is unfinished business to which we shall have to return once the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait has been reversed.

Rights of the Child Convention

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government propose to ratify the UN convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom signed the UN convention on the rights of the child on 19 April 1990. We intend to ratify the convention as soon as possible.

British Embassy, Bucharest

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will review the decision to close the British embassy in Bucharest from 15 December to 11 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been no such decision. During the period in question, the British embassy in Bucharest will close only on 24, 25 and 26 December and 1 January, apart from weekends. The visa section is normally closed to the public every Thursday.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what form of application to British posts overseas is made by employers of domestic servants desirous of visiting the United Kingdom together with those servants; and what details they are required to give of their domestic servants.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under present arrangements, unless the domestic servant, who must be aged 16 or over, is a visa national, an application to a British visa-issuing post overseas is not required for a visit to the United Kingdom. Visa nationals are required to obtain the appropriate visa at a British visa-issuing post. In such cases, the domestic servant is required to produce documentary evidence from the employer confirming that the servant is already in the service of the employer abroad, and that adequate support and accommodation will be provided in the United Kingdom.

THE ARTS

G. B. Shaw Estate

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what is the total sum that has accrued to the British museum from the G. B. Shaw estate;

(2) whether he will publish a table showing how much money has accrued to the British museum from the G. B. Shaw estate in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Renton: These are matters for the trustees of the British museum.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many individual members of the staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council were given merit awards during the 1989-90 financial year;

(2) what was the total value of merit awards given to individual members of staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council during 1989-90.

Mr. Alan Howarth: A total of 150 merit awards were made to members of staff of the Science and Engineering Research Council during the financial year 1989-90; the total value of these awards was £41,220.

Wilmington Grammar School

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue his decision on the grant-maintained status application made by the Wilmington grammar school for boys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering his decision. Section 73 (4)(b) of the Education Reform Act requires this proposal and the section 12 proposals published by Kent education authority on 13 June to close this school and the Wilmington high school, and the section 13 proposal published simultaneously by the Rochester Church of England diocesan board of education to establish a new voluntary aided school in the premises, to be considered together. He will inform the governors, the education authority and the diocese of his decision shortly.

Support and Training Grants

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocations will be made to local education authorities under the grants for education support and training programme for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is today writing to all local education authorities in England to inform them of the level of expenditure which I have approved for support in the grants for education support and training programme for 1991-92. The programme will support total expenditure of some £364 million in 1991-92. The programme is summarised in the table.

I am placing in the Library a more detailed table setting out allocations to individual local education authorities in each activity.

Teacher Training

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the intake of teacher training courses in England and Wales in 1989-90; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the numbers to provide for the needs of primary and secondary schools and institutions of further education in the years after 1993.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to his reply, 14 November 1990, c. 152]: My right hon. and learned Friend is today publishing the technical document describing our projections of school teacher demand and supply. A copy has been placed in the Library. It will contribute to a more informed debate about teacher supply by setting out the basis of our projections, and providing a range of projections as illustration. This will assist those who wish to produce their own projections and to form a view about ours. The document also responds to the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee which asked for a clearer statement of the Department's projection methodology.

TRANSPORT

Taxi Passengers (Accidents)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what figures he has for the past 10 years of the number of people killed or seriously injured whilst travelling by taxi.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the table. The number of taxis registered is also shown. The only available figures for both accidents and vehicle registrations relate to purpose-built taxis.

Traffic (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will prepare and place in the Library a map showing the principal locations of traffic lock or congestion in London for the year 1989 or other convenient period, indicating for each the principal causes of such conditions.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my Department's report "Traffic Speeds on London Roads", published in November 1989, which shows speeds on the strategic network in London, and to the reports of stage 1 of the London assessment studies published in December 1986 which identified problems on the road network in the study areas and their causes. I am placing in the Library a map showing the location of congestion on the trunk road network identified by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the range of passenger car units per hour per lane currently flowing on routes in London likely to be designated as red routes; and the range of respective increase in flow he expects after their designation.

Mr. Chope: Traffic flows vary very widely, depending on the characteristics of the road and the time of day. It is therefore not possible to provide meaningful figures in this form. An objective is to encourage traffic to use the priority routes rather than unsuitable residential roads. We shall be monitoring the pilot scheme to observe the effects on traffic flows through the area.

Clearways (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a map showing the clearways in London on which there are existing parking or waiting restrictions originally introduced by the Greater London council in co-operation with London borough councils.

Mr. Chope: Clearways in London were introduced by the Minister of Transport in 1961 under the London (Prohibition of Waiting) (Clearways) Order SI No. 1401. There have been a number of subsequent amendments. These specify the locations in great detail and I am investigating whether a convenient summary map can be produced.

Coach and Rail Services

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any estimates are available of the number of long-distance passengers carried by (a) coach and (b) rail services from 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Freeman: Information required is not available in the form requested, but the following data from the national travel survey provide an assessment of comparable journeys greater than 25 miles in length.

Passenger journeys per year

(millions)

	Coach	Rail
1985-86	70	200

Information from this source for 1989-90 will be available in mid-1992.

Pedestrians

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the number of pedestrians killed in Great Britain, for the years 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Chope: Comprehensive information on pedestrian fatalities is not available. However, information is available on those killed in road accidents and is summarised in the table.

Pedestrian deaths: Great Britain: 1986 to 1989

Year	Deaths
1988	1,753
1989	1,706

Pedestrian casualty figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Drivers (Health)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what medical advice is available to him on the health of drivers and motor cycle riders and on those in charge of the various forms of public transport for which he is responsible.

Mr. Chope: All drivers are required by law to notify DVLA, Swansea, of any relevant health condition when they apply for a driving licence, or if a condition develops or worsens during the currency of a licence. In addition public service vehicle drivers are required to submit a full medical report on first application for their vocational licence and at five-yearly intervals from age 46.

Car Phones

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gloucester on 11 December, Official Report, column 344, what new information he has concerning the safety implications of the use of hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: None.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gloucester on 11 December, Official Report, column 344, what views were expressed at his meeting with the Association of Chief Police Officers by the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning the safety implications of using hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Association of Chief Police Officers expressed the view that existing powers are sufficient to deal with this problem.

A33

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport following two recent accidents on the A33, if he has any plans to speed up the completion date for the upgrading of this road to motorway standards.

Mr. Chope: No, the contract completion date for the widening of the Compton to Bassett section of the A33 trunk road is October 1991. We have however taken steps to provide additional coning, flashing lights and warning signs through the site of the works.

WALES

Morriston Hospital, Swansea

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what bed complement is planned for the new burns and plastic surgery unit at Morriston hospital, Swansea.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The bed complement planned for the new burns, plastic and maxillofacial surgery unit at Morriston hospital is 122.

Treatment Centres

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list against the name of each of the centres established in Wales as part of his Department's treatment centres initiative (a) the number of patients treated in each calendar month since the centre started work and (b) the number of patients within each calendar month's total, broken down to show how many came from each district health authority district in Wales and how many of those treated were from outside Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information showing the numbers treated at the treatment centres including those Welsh residents transferred from English lists is as follows:

Valleys Initiative

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will assess the impact on the unemployment figures of the valleys initiative in each of the areas covered by the initiative since the scheme started.

Mr. David Hunt: The unemployment rate in the whole of the area covered by the programme for the valleys has fallen by 4·1 per cent. since June 1988. This compares with a fall of 3·2 per cent. in Wales and 2·2 per cent. in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Land Reclamation

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual rate of land reclamation in the valleys of south Wales since 1979 with the amount of money spent on land reclamation in south Wales each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Lady and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been spent by his Department on public safety campaigns encouraging the use of domestic smoke alarms in each of the last five years; how much is budgeted for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None. The Home Office is responsible for fire safety publicity in Wales.

Urban Programme Grant

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual urban programme grant for Wales for each year since the scheme started, giving the percentage increase or decrease each year and the rate of inflation for each of the corresponding years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is contained in the table for 1975-76 onwards. Information relating to earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Year	UP allocation Wales £ million[1]	Percentage change over previous year	Percentage increase in GDP deflator

[1] Allocation represents the level of expenditure approved, made up of 75 per cent. grant and 25 per cent. local authority contribution.

SCOTLAND

Car Ownership

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list the estimated number of households with a car in (a) Falkirk district, (b) Stirling district and (c) Clackmannan district, and express these figures as a percentage of all households in each district.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest information available is from the 1981 census of population and is shown in the table:

District	Households with at least one car available
	Number	Percentage of all households
Falkirk	27,525	54·6
Stirling	16,585	61·5
Clackmannan	9,626	58·3

Births (Central Region)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list, for each of the past 10 years, the number of births by postal code of the residence of the mother for each postal code area in Central region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Births by postcode sector of usual residence of mother, Central Region, 1980 to 1989

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent by his Department on public safety campaigns encouraging the use of domestic smoke alarms in each of the last five years; how much money is budgeted for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Home and Health Department has spent the following amounts in connection with these campaigns:

1988-89	89,000
1989-90	51,000
[1]1990-91	84,000

[1] Estimate.

The Department will continue to encourage the installation of domestic smoke alarms in Scotland through media advertising and the provision of publicity material to the eight Scottish fire brigades for their local campaigns.

Sandeels

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has yet received sufficient data to give a reliable estimate on the recruitment level of sandeels in Shetland waters in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The results of the most recent assessment carried out by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries marine laboratory, Aberdeen indicate the size of the 1989 year class of sandeels as 25,327 million. This is regarded as being approximately average abundance. This provisional scientific assessment and related advice is being studied closely. We will consult fishery and other interests very shortly regarding 1991 management arrangements for the Shetland sandeel fishery.

Dogs

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has received to the consultation paper "The Control of Dogs"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 17 December 1990]: In Scotland we have received to date 110 responses to the consultation paper which was issued jointly with the Home Office, the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment. Most of the responses which we received were supportive of our proposals and my right hon. Friend will wish to consider carefully with colleagues what further action on dogs might be appropriate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the efficiency of agriculture in terms of output and value of output per person engaged in each of the EEC countries; and if he will list them in league order.

Mr. Curry: Member states' shares of Community agricultural output are shown in column (a) of the table: information on gross value added—a measure of agricultural output—per annual labour unit on average is shown in column (b). The information provides only a broad guide to comparative labour productivity for the agriculture sector as a whole: comparisons are affected by exchange rates, including differences between green and market rates, price levels and many other factors including variations in the weather. Labour productivity is a partial measure of overall efficiency since it ignores other factors of production, notably capital: comprehensive comparisons of productivity are not available. Less than 15 per cent. of Community output is produced in member states with higher labour productivity than the United Kingdom whereas over three quarters of Community output is accounted for by member states where labour productivity on average is lower than in the United Kingdom.

	Share of Community agricultural output average 1987 and 1988	Gross value added[1] per annual labour unit average 1987 to 1989 (forecast)
	per cent. (a)	£[2] (b)

Greece	3·8	4,600
Portugal	1·7	1,200

[1] Gross value added is the value of output minus current material inputs.
[2] Rounded to nearest £100.
[3] Relates to average of 1987 and 1988.

Sources: Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food calculations based on Eurostat information.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the state of agriculture.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 29 November, Official Report, column 1008.

Cereals

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been deducted from farmers in each of the 12 EEC states in cereals co-responsibility levy in each year since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Information provided by the Commission of the European Communities on cereals co-responsibility levy receipts in each member state is set out in the table. These omit Portugal because under its accession terms Portuguese farmers are exempt from levy until 1991. It should be noted that levy is not necessarily collected in the country of origin of the grain.

DEFENCE

Defence Exports

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether his Department has a record of exports of defence equipment and munitions to Yugoslavia for each year during the period 1980 to 1990;

(2) whether the defence export services organisation maintains records of exports of defence material on a country-by-country basis;

(3) whether his Department has a record of exports of defence equipment and munitions to Cyprus for each year 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. Statistics of United Kingdom defence exports, derived from Customs and Excise, are set out by broad geographical regions in volume 2 of the annual SDE.

Astra Holdings plc

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has, at any time, received information from representatives of Astra Holdings plc relating to the export activities of its former subsidiary PRB.

Mr. Alan Clark: Shortly after acquiring PRB, Astra Holdings plc consulted the MOD about certain contracts which the company had inherited through its acquisition. These discussions took place in confidence.

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date a licence was first issued to the Essex and Suffolk hunt to hunt on his Ministry's land at Colchester; and how frequently the licence is renewable.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Essex and Suffolk hunt has had a licence to hunt on Ministry of Defence land since before 1974. Records before that date are no longer retained. The licence is renewed annually.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of the licence issued to the Essex and Suffolk hunt to hunt on his Ministry's land at Colchester in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The full terms of the licence are commercial-in-confidence between my Department and the Essex and Suffolk hunt.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual fee paid by the Essex and Suffolk hunt to hunt on his Ministry's land at Colchester.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This information is commercial-in-confidence between my Department and the Essex and Suffolk hunt.

Light Bulbs

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to encourage the use of low-energy light bulbs in his Department's buildings and offices.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is our policy to install the most efficient suitable lighting systems in all newly designed buildings and offices, and in those undergoing major refurbishment. On existing installations the use of low-energy light bulbs is encouraged where practical.

Over-the-horizon Radar

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the appropriated funds required for the United States' share of the proposed joint United States-United Kingdom trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom was requested from the United States Congress in fiscal year 1991; and how much of this was authorised or appropriated.

Mr. Alan Clark: This is a matter for the United States Government.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements currently exist for the disposal of nuclear waste from the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Nuclear waste is disposed of from the atomic weapons establishment taking advantage of nationally available disposal routes under arrangements which are overseen by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is intended that the company running the atomic weapons establishment after contractorisation will be able to alter the redundancy arrangements of the staff of the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The redundancy arrangements will form part of the conditions of service of staff. Any changes to the conditions of service will be a matter for negotiation between the contractor and the trade unions.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now make it his policy to release information on the number of staff in the safety division stationed at (a) the atomic weapons establishment, Cardiff, (b) the atomic weapons establishment, Burghfield, and (c) the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston, following the evidence given to the Select Committee on Defence, printed on page 81 of its ninth report, Session 1989-90, HC 237.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. It would not be in the national interest to do so.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are envisaged for the disposal of nuclear waste from the atomic weapons establishment after its contractorisation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The arrangements for the disposal of nuclear waste from the atomic weapons establishment will continue to be overseen by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what differences there will be in the index-linking arrangements between the new atomic weapons establishment pension scheme that is due to be arranged as a result of the contractorisation of the atomic weapons establishment and the existing principal civil service pension scheme and the UKAEA pension scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is intended that the benefit terms of the new AWE pension scheme include provision for pensions to be increased in line with PCSPS or principal non-industrial superannuation scheme increases.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements currently exist for redundancy payments under the principal civil service pension scheme and the UKAEA scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The current arrangements for making redundancy payments to AWE staff are set out in section 10 of the PCSPS and section 8 of the UKAEA PNISS. Broadly, these provide for benefits according to age, length of qualifying service and rate of pay at the time of redundancy. In the unlikely event that the redundancy benefits of PCSPS and the UKAEA PNISS amount to less than the statutory provision, staff may receive a special payment to bring them up to the level paid under the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are planned for redundancy payments under the new AWE pension scheme that is due to be arranged as a result of the contractorisation of the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The new redundancy scheme will provide redundancy payments which, when taken together with those of the new pension scheme, will be at least as good as those currently provided under the PCSPS and UKAEA PNISS arrangements. However, in view of AWE's continuing need for staff, and the Government's firm commitment to the nuclear programme, redundancies are unlikely.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the proposed relationship between the compliance directorate and the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment under phase 2 of the contractorisation programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The MOD compliance directorate based at AWE will be independent of the establishment's division. It will be staffed by Crown servants and, to carry out their role of contract oversight and compliance, there will need to be a close and co-operative relationship between them and the contractor's safety division.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to ensure that the company currently producing proposals for the full contractorisation of the atomic weapons establishment will not derive an unfair advantage in competing for the contract in 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The interim-management contractor is not responsible for formulating proposals for full contractorisation of AWE. This task is the responsibility of the MOD and the usual steps will be taken to ensure full and fair competition for the eventual operating contract.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be the employer of members of staff in the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment under the proposed contractorisation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The staff of the safety division will become part of the contractor's organisation on full contractorisation.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is envisaged that the company that wins the contract to operate the atomic weapons establishment will have the power to alter the pension arrangements for the staff of the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The new AWE pension scheme will be set up under trust deed which will include the rules of the scheme. The scheme will be managed by a trustee company specially set up for this purpose. The board of this trustee company will include persons nominated by the employing company, the Ministry of Defence and the members, or their representatives. In this way, members will have a say in the operation of the scheme. Any changes in the terms of the scheme will be negotiated between the employing company-commercial manager and the trade unions. MOD approval will be required before any changes in benefits or contributions can be implemented.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the company selected to operate the atomic weapons establishment after contractorisation will be allowed to alter the number and grades of staff in the safety division of the establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The contractor will be bound by strict safety requirements which will include the maintenance of a fully effective internal safety organisation. The compliance directorate will ensure that safety requirements are met effectively and efficiently. Any detailed changes the contractor may wish to make would have to be compatible with this requirement.

HMS Challenger

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the total cost involved in the construction, repair, renewal and redesign of HMS Challenger at current market prices and the anticipated reserve price proposed for the vessel at this period.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total project acquisition cost of HMS Challenger, together with the cost of the two docking periods which she has undergone is some £240 million at 1990-91 prices. The arrangements for the sale of the vessel are commercially confidential.

Iraqi Supergun

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on whether Iraq has test-fired a supergun.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not the practice to comment on such matters.

Adjutant General's Corps

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has determined which existing corps and functions should be included in the new Adjutant General's Corps; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I can confirm that my right hon. Friend has decided that the Adjutant General's Corps should include the following existing Corps, which will retain their individual cap badges:

Corps of Royal Military Police
Military Provost Staff Corps
Royal Army Educational Corps
Army Legal Corps

The Adjutant General's Corps will also include a new Corps, covering various administrative functions, whose title has not yet been determined. This new Corps will be responsible for the functions currently undertaken by the Royal Army Pay Corps, the staff clerk functions undertaken by the Royal Army Ordnance Corps and the Women's Royal Army Corps, and all other regimental clerks. Those members of the WRAC who do not elect to join existing Corps under our plans for the wider employment of women will also become members of this new Corps.

The Royal Army Chaplains' Department will not form part of the AG Corps, but will be closely associated with it and supported administratively by the Corps.

The formation of a single Adjutant General's Corps will offer a firm basis for rationalisation of the Army's personnel services and contribute to the reductions being sought in the support area following my right hon. Friend's statement on 25 July concerning "Options for Change".

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) visually impaired people, (b) deaf people, (c) mentally handicapped people and (d) people with agoraphobia will receive (i) lower rate attendance component of the disability living allowance, (ii) middle rate attendance component, (iii) higher rate attendance component, (iv) lower rate mobility component and (v) higher rate mobility component.

Mr. Scott: The numbers of people in each category who will receive the various rates of disability living allowance cannot be predicted reliably. The estimates in the table for the new lower rates of each component are derived from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability surveys, and give the numbers of people with each of these disabilities who come into the projected eligible populations. For the rates of the disability living allowance which equate to the existing benefits, the figures are based on those who in 1985 reported receipt of attendance allowance or mobility allowance in the OPCS surveys. Given the substantial increases in the caseloads for both benefits since 1985, the numbers in these groups will inevitably be much higher now.

	Lower rates (in thousands)
	Care (i)	Mobility (iv)
(a) Visually impaired people	40	55
(b) [Deaf people	10	15]
People with hearing impairments	60	65
(c) Mentally handicapped people	30	75

(d) People with agoraphobia cannot be identified from the OPCS data but these people are amongst the groups intended to be covered by the criteria for the lower rate mobility component.

Table 2

	Higher rates (in thousands)
	care (ii)	care (iii)	mobility (v)
(a) Visually impaired people	95	85	70
(b) Deaf people	30	25	15
People with hearing impairments	115	85	90
(c) Mentally handicapped people	55	40	35

Benefit Payments (Worksop)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the reasons why his Department's payments have not been made to claimants in Worksop; and when he expects the situation to return to normal.

Miss Widdecombe: Severe weather conditions on 10 and 11 December meant that the DSS office in Worksop was without power or water and the office had to be closed. Partial restoration of services on 12 December allowed the office to reopen that day. Management also opened a caller office in Retford to help make urgent payments. Normal service has now been restored.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authority tenants of pensionable age are in receipt of (a) full housing benefit and (b) partial housing benefit; and what percentage they are of the total number of local authority tenants of pensionable age.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that the number of recipients aged 60 and over in receipt of housing benefit at 31 May 1989 was:

	Rent rebates Great Britain	Percentage of local authority tenants[1]	Rate rebates England and Wales only	Percentage of local authority tenants[1]
	(000)		(000)
House benefit recipients also in receipt of income support	735	(24)	615	(20)
Housing benefit recipients not in receipt of income support	950	(30)	755	(24)
TOTAL	1,685	(54)	1,370	(44)

[1] Local authority tenants are men aged 65 and over and women aged 60 and over.

Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, further to the answer given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North on 7 December, Official Report, column 233, he will publish similar estimates for April 1991; if he will include an allowance for the shortfall in the 1979 uprating relative to earnings; and if he will base his estimate of increases in earnings on data which would have been available shortly after each uprating.

Miss Widdecombe: The full rate of basic retirement pension, if revalued since 1979 by the higher of the annual percentage increase in prices or earnings six months before the date of the uprating would be £21·05 higher for a couple based solely on the husband's contribution and £13·05 more for a single person. The cost to the national insurance fund of these increases would amount to about £6 billion a year. It is not possible to calculate extra amounts on the basis of increases in earnings available after the April 1991 uprating.

Pensioners' Christmas Bonus

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what level the Christmas bonus for senior citizens would now stand if the original payment when first introduced in 1972 had been uprated by (a) the rise in retail prices or (b) the rise in average earnings; what is the estimated cost of paying the pensioners' Christmas bonus at £10 in the current year; what would be the cost of increasing it by (i) 50 per cent., (ii) 100 per cent., (iii) sufficient to take account of (a) and (iv) sufficient to take account of (b); and whether he has any plans for future increases in the payment.

Miss Widdecombe: If the Christmas bonus had been uprated each year since 1972 in line with the increase in retail prices it would now be worth approximately £52. If it had been uprated each year since 1972 in line with earnings it would now be worth approximately £70.

The estimated cost of paying the pensioners' Christmas bonus in 1990-91 is approximately £114 million. Increasing it by 50 per cent. would cost an extra £57 million; increasing it by 100 per cent. would cost an extra £114 million.

Increasing the Christmas bonus to £52 would cost an extra £479 million and increasing it to £70 would cost an extra £684 million.

We have no plans at present for increasing the payment.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of his Department since 1 January 1985 giving the date and purpose of each survey.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Details of most surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of the Department are contained in the DHSS yearbooks of research and development 1985-88 and in the Department of Health yearbook of research and development 1989, copies of which are in the Library. Opinion surveys have also been conducted as part of the following customer research activities:

Survey	Date of Fieldwork	Purpose
1. Public Attitudes to Social Secuirty	January 1985	Commissioned as part of the background to the review of social security to add to and bring up-to-date information already available from past surveys about people's views of social security. Details published in Cmnd 9519

Family Credit Advertising	April 1990	Evaluation of Family Credit advertising in Child Benefit order books and/or order book information awareness
Methods of Payment of Benefits	November—December '90	To assess awareness of and attitudes towards methods of payment of Retirement Pension, Child Benefit and Income Support

Taxi Fares (Reimbursement)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances taxi fares will be paid to claimants attending a regional medical service examination for invalidity benefit; what is the procedure for claiming taxi fares in advance; what is the procedure for reimbursing claimants their taxi fares; what is the average length of time taken to reimburse claimants' taxi fares; and how much has been paid out in taxi fares.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

Taxi fares are not ordinarily reimbursed to claimants attending a regional medical service examination for invalidity benefit. They may be paid if the claimant is unable to travel by public transport because of illness or disability, or if public transport is not available at the time of attendance.

A claimant wishing to claim taxi fares should contact the divisional medical office in advance. Each application is assessed individually and, if authorised, the claimant will be reimbursed at the time of examination.

If the claimant requests taxi fares at the time of examination, the public transport fares are paid immediately, and the request for the excess taxi fare forwarded to the divisional medical office. If authorised, the claim is either paid direct by the divisional medical office or forwarded to the regional finance office, DSS, for payment. The claim is usually reimbursed within 10 days.

The annual cost of reimbursing taxi fares is approximately £800 per year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ulster Agricultural Organisation Society

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for financial support for the Ulster Agricultural Organisation Society Ltd.

Mr. Hanley: I have no proposals to provide financial support to the Ulster Agricultural Organisation Society Ltd. The organisation is, I understand, examining other possible ways of supplementing its income.

Eating Disorders Association

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance he will make available to the Eating Disorders Association self-help group in Northern Ireland for the financial year commencing 1 April 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Health and Social Services has grant-aided the central administrative costs of the Eating Disorders Association since its formation in Northern Ireland in 1985. The current year's grant is £9,240. Grant aid for the financial year 1991-92 will not be determined before March 1991.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by processing plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in Upper Bann.

Mr. Hanley: I am aware of the recent decision by the rendering plants not to accept fallen animals. The Department of Agriculture issued advice to farmers and others on disposal of fallen animals in the present circumstances.

The Department is also ready to advise the industry on any proposals it may make to provide alternative means of disposal. It is the responsibility of the agriculture industry, like that of any other industry, to exercise a duty of care in the safe disposal of its waste and protect public health and the environment.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action the Department of Agriculture will adopt following the withdrawal of a collection service in respect of fallen animals.

Mr. Hanley: The agriculture industry is responsible for the safe disposal of its waste products in a manner which safeguards public health and avoids harm to the environment.

The Department of Agriculture has issued advice to the industry on the existing alternative disposal arrangements. It will continue to advise the industry on any new proposals which the industry may make.

Security

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: Seventy-four people have died in Northern Ireland this year as a result of the security situation. Up to 30 September 1990, 288 people had been charged with terrorist-type offences, including six for murder and 49 for attempted murder, and 307 had been convicted of terrorist-type offences including two for murder and 21 for attempted murder.

Lough Neagh (Search and Rescue)

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to take any action to enhance search and rescue facilities on Lough Neagh.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for the preservation of life on Lough Neagh rests with the Royal Ulster Constabulary. In addition to the RUC and other emergency services there is a voluntary search and rescue service for the lough which has a vessel maintained by Craigavon borough council. In order to enhance this service the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland intends to make a one-off grant of £60,000 to the council for the purchase of a second vessel and ancillary equipment.

Parliamentary approval to this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, vote 4, section G. Pending that approval urgent expenditure estimated at £60,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any information on the costs of independent homes for persons in need and nursing homes in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Copies of a report of a survey undertaken by Price Waterhouse, management consultants during July and August 1990 have been placed in the Library. Information about running and other costs was obtained from a sample of 72 registered homes for persons in need and nursing homes in respect of financial years commencing between October 1989 and May 1990. The key findings of the survey are as follows:

Costs per bed per week[1]

	Sample size	Running costs	Running costs and capital costs	Running costs, capital costs and profit
Homes for persons in need	35
Median		102·60	126·10	134·41
Mean		112·03	137·80	146·76
Nursing homes	37
Median		160·17	197·01	209·82
Mean		157·90	194·22	206·85

[1] Assuming a 90 per cent. occupancy rate.

The present income support levels exceed these figures.

EMPLOYMENT

HSE Inspectors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date the HSE began separately to itemise expenditure on overseas subsistence and travel by inspectors of principal grade and above in its budget.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure on overseas travel and subsistence is not recorded separately from other travel and subsistence costs on HSE's accounting system.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fraudulent claims by HSE principal grade and above inspectors have been identified in each of the last four years; and what action has been taken against those involved.

Mr. Forth: No fraudulent claims by HSE inspectors have been identified in the last four years.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the current procedures for the authorisation and payment of overseas travelling and subsistence allowances for HSE inspectors of principal grade and above; and what steps are taken to check the validity of all such payments.

Mr. Forth: All journeys to foreign countries by HSE staff require prior written approval at unified grade 3 or above before the visit can be undertaken.

Staff are provided with guidance on their entitlement to travelling and subsistence allowances by a headquarters section which checks for accuracy all claims made. As a further check on the validity of the claims, a proportion are returned to line managers.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young persons aged 16 or 17 years have applied for, and have been turned down for, a YTS place in the last year; and how many 16 or 17-year-olds he estimates are currently without a job, YTS place, or any benefit.

Mr. Forth: All young people under 18 years who are not in full-time education or a job and are seeking training are guaranteed a suitable place on youth training. The number of 16 and 17-year-olds who are currently without a job, YTS place, or any benefit, and who are not in full-time education, is not available.

Training (Budget Allocations)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will produce a table showing the budget allocations for the financial year 1990-91 for each (i) Training Agency area office and (ii) approved TEC showing the planned budget allocations for each area office and approved TEC for the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: The allocated budgets for each of the approved training and enterprise councils for the financial year 1990-91 are set out in the table. Budget allocations for the financial year 1991-92 are not yet available. Budgets are not allocated to area offices.

Tourism (Northumbria)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the numbers employed in tourism and related employment in the Northumbria tourist board area in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson: The only information for the Northumbria tourist board area in the period requested is for September 1987, when the estimated number of employees in tourism-related industries was 60,000. This figure does not include the self-employed, for whom comparable estimates are not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the method of calculation of estimates of monthly and quarterly employment in the apparel, knitting and textiles industries; and what is his Department's assessment of the possible margin of error;

(2) what was the extent of revisions to his Department's estimates of employment in the apparel, knitting and textiles industries following the most recent census of employment and labour force survey; and what were the reasons for these;

(3) what expressions of concern he has received from the apparel, knitting and textiles industries about the accuracy of his Department's estimates of employment in these industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates are based on periodic censuses of employment, updated by employment trends shown in the monthly and quarterly samples of employers in the relevant industries. Estimates for periods since the latest census are adjusted to reflect employment trends indicated in the annual labour force surveys. Margins of error depend on a number of factors which are not capable of being fully quantified. Between censuses, samples for the apparel and knitwear industries are too small to merit their separate publication. Revisions to the estimates for the textile industries are shown in the table.

Current methods for producing monthly and quarterly estimates do not fully reflect the opening and closures of business after the latest census benchmark. Officials met representatives of the Apparel, Knitting and Textiles Alliance on 12 April 1990, and acknowledged that this would be a problem for industries characterised by a high number of closures. Officials explained that work on improving the monthly and quarterly estimates had begun in September 1989 and that progress was carefully monitored by Ministers. Details of these plans were revealed at the statistics users conference in November 1990.

Accident Claims

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 3 December, Official Report, column 40, what is the statutory basis for the Health and Safety Executive's charge for factual statements requested in connection with civil claims.

Mr. Forth: Section 13(1)(g) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 empowers the Health and Safety Executive acting on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission to charge for the provision of factual statements.

Employers (Prosecutions)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions of employers there have been in Scotland in every year since 1960 for producing false records.

Mr. Forth: Since 1960 there has been one such prosecution under wages council legislation and that was in 1982.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions of employers there have been in Scotland in every year since 1960 for illegal underpayment of wages.

Mr. Forth: There have been five such prosecutions under wages council legislation since 1960, one in 1962 and four in 1977.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions of employers there have been in Scotland in every year since 1960 for failure to produce records.

Mr. Forth: Since 1960 there has been one such prosecution under wages council legislation and that was in 1979.

Restart

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people attended a restart interview in the six months ended September, and what were the results of those interviews.

Mr. Jackson: The restart interview programme provides a framework within which the Employment Service provides help for long-term unemployed people. It provides a gateway to the range of employment and training opportunities available as well as being a means of ensuring that claimants remain available for and are actively seeking work.

During the period in question 630,000 people were interviewed and immediately following their interview 10,500 started work, 35,600 began training under employment training, 27,300 started in job club, 14,400 started a restart course and 4,200 attended an enterprise allowance scheme awareness day.

These figures reflect only the direct results of restart. We do not know how many people subsequently take up a job or a place on an employment or training programme as a result of the guidance given to them at their interview.

Over the same period the Employment Service as a whole placed 118,000 long-term unemployed people into work, 74,500 into employment training, 68,600 into job club and 7,700 into enterprise allowance schemes.

HEALTH

Family Doctors

2. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much spending on the family doctor service has risen in the last 11 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Eighty-five per cent. in real terms.

Cornwall Air Ambulance

15. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will review his decision not to contribute to the funding of the Cornwall air ambulance during the period of its evaluation.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Drug Prescribing

16. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that general practitioners will not be prevented or restricted from prescribing drugs by the action of family health service associations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The indicative prescribing scheme will promote quality in this part of the health service and will in no way prevent general practitioners from prescribing all the drugs their patients need.

Rural Health Facilities

17. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he now proposes to introduce any new initiatives to improve health service facilities in rural areas.

Mr. Dorrell: From 1 April 1991 we shall introduce significant improvements with the rural practice payments scheme for general practitioners in truly rural areas and the health service reforms will ensure health and family health service authorities will in future pay particular attention to the needs of their residents for co-ordinated hospital, community and primary health care.

Nottingham Health Authority

18. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the rate of increase in funding for the Nottingham health authority over the last five years has been.

Mr. Dorrell: Over the period 1985-86 to 1990-91 Nottingham health authority received an average annual revenue cash increase of 8·6 per cent., which represents a 13·1 per cent. real increase in resources.

National Health Service and Community Care Act

19. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which local authorities are planning to implement the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 before April 1993.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The first phase of community care implementation under the Act begins in April 1991, when authorities will introduce complaints procedures and inspection units and the specific grants for services for mental illness and drugs and alcohol become available. But we know that many authorities intend to implement, at least in part, proposals scheduled for introduction in phases 2 and 3, in advance of the statutory requirements.

Health Care Purchasing

20. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments he makes of the balance of advantage between health care providers and purchasers.

Mr. Waldegrave: Patients will be the prime beneficiaries of the separation of the roles of purchasers and providers in the reformed national health service.

Waiting Lists

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives he has to reduce hospital waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) earlier today.

Community Health Services

22. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to improve the arrangements for liaison between community health service and social services departments concerning individual patient care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In implementing our policy for community care, social services departments and national health service authorities will be required by the National Health Service and Community Care Act to liaise in planning services. They will also need to work closely in the development of assessment and care management arrangements for the delivery of services to individuals.

Family Planning

23. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of family planning services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We continue to regard family planning as an important health care service. Our policy remains that people should be free to choose their source of family planning advice and treatment and that health authority clinic services complement those provided by family doctors.

London Ambulance Service

24. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the proceedings of the London ambulance service board are made public.

Mr. Dorrell: The South West Thames regional health authority has overall responsibility for the London ambulance service—LAS—and the LAS board reports to the RHA. The purpose of the board is to develop and improve the management and operations of the LAS. It would not be appropriate for its proceedings to be made public. But an annual report will be published.

NHS Trusts

25. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to allow new hospitals or existing non-national health service hospitals such as military hospitals to become self-governing national health service trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: New national health service hospitals will be eligible to apply for NHS trust status once they are operational. Any NHS hospital or other unit actively involved in patient care may apply for trust status. Military hospitals are the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence and thus are not eligible.

28. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service trust applications were rejected on the grounds of financial non-viability.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. The decisions on the trust applications were taken in the light of all the information available to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, of which the financial assessment was one element.

Junior Doctors

26. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing the hours worked by junior doctors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yesterday I signed an agreement with the medical profession to reduce junior doctors' hours. Under the agreement—the result of intensive talks by representatives of all the relevant bodies—junior doctors will move towards a maximum working week of 72 hours on duty—and preferably less. As a first step, the Government will fund 200 new consultant and 50 new staff grade posts in England in 1991-92 in order to stimulate the introduction of changed working patterns. The other United Kingdom health departments will be making their financial contribution in support of this initiative.

General Practitioners

27. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much funding for general practitioner practice improvements has increased in the last 11 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Expenditure on GP premises has risen fourfold in real terms since 1979-80, with much of the increase due to payments through cost rent and improvement grants for improvements to premises.

NHS Funding

29. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the level of national health service funding will be next year; and what it was in 1978.

Mr. Dorrell: Next year the national health service in England will have a total of £26·2 billion to spend. This represents a real terms increase of 50 per cent. on the 1978-79 gross spending total of £6·5 billion.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

30. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding undertaken by his Department to promote hormone replacement therapy as a preventive treatment for menopausal illnesses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Decisions on prescribing hormone replacement therapy rest on clinical judgment and are therefore a professional matter. We were pleased to provide funding of £9,500 for a workshop on HRT and osteoporosis, a total of £53,000 to three voluntary organisations in this field, and £128,000 for research projects. The number of prescriptions for HRT in 1989 was 2·9 million which cost the NHS £29·5 million.

Nurses (Training Courses)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of nurses attending training courses in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Neuroscience

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated net present value of the proposed capital spending of over £50 million to move neuroscience services from Shooters Hill to Denmark Hill.

Mr. Dorrell: The option appraisal demonstrated that the development at Denmark Hill would be the cheapest in capital terms and significantly better on non-financial service criteria such as integration, turbulence and timing. Calculation of the net present value would require non-financial service benefits to be expressed in monetary terms and this was not considered necessary.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the numbers of extra neuroscience consultations and procedures expected as the result of the proposed move of neuroscience from Shooters Hill to Denmark Hill.

Mr. Dorrell: The new centre at Denmark Hill will be a replacement facility designed for the same population served by the existing centres but which will offer a much improved standard of service. It is anticipated that it will treat approximately the same number of patients.

In addition, a completely new magnetic resonance imaging facility will be available which will offer a non-invasive, faster and more accurate diagnostic service.

Nurses' Homes

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each London borough the amounts by which lodging charges in nurses' homes have been abated in 1990-91 to take account of the abolition of domestic rates.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Lodging charges in nurses' homes were abated from 1 April 1990 by standard percentages varying between 18·6 per cent. and 21·7 per cent.—the precise figure depending on the category of accommodation—after increases for 1990-91 were applied, to take account of the abolition of domestic rates. Health authorities have had a degree of flexibility over the charges they make since April 1989. Information on the cash value of abatements by London boroughs is not held centrally.

Residential Homes

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from organisations representing private care home owners regarding the availability of residential care for elderly and disabled persons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representations from private care home owners have been received on a variety of issues including residential and nursing home aspects of the Government's plans for the future provision and development of community care.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities have transferred elderly residents' homes to independent trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Mental Health

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to MIND's work for people with mental health problems to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 4 to 8 February 1991.

Operations

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of national health service patients in 1990 who have had operations for (i) hysterectomies and (ii) prostate gland removals; and what is his estimate of the number of patients on the waiting list for these operations and the average time spent on the waiting list.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest figures available centrally show that in the year ending March 1989 there were an estimated 65,000 completed episodes of hospital care for patients having an hysterectomy and 46,700 episodes for prostate gland removal. The estimated mean waiting time before admission for these operations was 14·1 weeks and 15·9 weeks respectively. Information about patients currently on waiting lists is collected by the specialty of intended treatment, not by individual diagnosis or condition.

Juveniles (Remand in Custody)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the numbers and percentages of juveniles remanded to secure establishments by the magistrates courts of Cardiff, Bristol and London for the last available year; and what were the comparable figures five and 10 years ago.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no power for the courts to remand juveniles direct to local authority secure accommodation. Local authorities can place juveniles in secure accommodation who have been remanded to their care, but information is not collected centrally on the courts at which such juveniles appeared.

Home Carers

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a register of home carers in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to set up a register of home carers in England. Plans in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

HIV-AIDS Prevention Co-ordinator

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district HIV-AIDS prevention co-ordinators have been appointed; and how their work will be monitored and evaluated.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As at November 1990, more than 150 district health authorities in England had in place officers with responsibility for the co-ordination of district HIV prevention work. The Department has asked all district health authorities to finalise arrangements by March 1991.

Monitoring and evaluation of co-ordinators' work will, primarily, be achieved through each regional health authority's annual AIDS (Control) Act report. The Department is currently considering HIV prevention co-ordinators' continuing support and training needs in the light of a national seminar held last month which I attended.

Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of (a) men and (b) women whose death was caused by lung cancer for each year since 1979 for England and Wales;

(2) if he will list the number of deaths caused by breast cancer for each year since 1979 in England and Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of deaths with an underlying cause of (a) breast cancer and (b) lung cancer, in England and Wales 1979-89 is shown in the table:

Number of deaths with underlying cause (a) Breast cancer (b) Lung cancer, England and Wales 1979-89

HIV-AIDS Funds

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what international comparisons are available on Government funding within individual European countries for HIV and AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

GP Budgets

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors have now opted for practice budgets; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are currently around 325 practices undertaking the preparatory work necessary to become fund holders from 1 April 1991.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent consideration his Department has given to the call for an out-of-court settlement for people with haemophilia who were infected by the AIDS virus in the course of national health service treatment.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 11 December at columns 364-65.

Diabetics (Disposable Needles)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make available on prescription for diabetics suitable disposable needles for insulin pen-type injections.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: NHS supply arrangements for insulin pens and needles need to be considered together. Subject to our normal evaluation of individual brands, we would consider making pens and needles prescribable, as an alternative to syringes, if this could be done without additional cost. Discussions with suppliers are currently in progress.

Health Authorities (Blacklisting)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning blacklisting by health authorities in respect of applicants for jobs at other health authorities; and what guidance is issued to health authority officials in respect of such practices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such representations have been received. Health authorities are well aware that no boycott of staff should take place.

Surrey GP Formulary

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money was spent on the production and distribution of the Surrey family health services authority's "General Practice Formulary 1990"; and whether the authority plans to monitor its use by NHS doctors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The production and distribution of Surrey FHSA's "General Practice Formulary 1990" cost around £19,000. The FHSA plans to monitor the use and effectiveness of the formulary through visits and inquiries by the medical adviser and feedback to the formulary committee which is keeping the document under review.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to monitor the use and effectiveness of the general practitioners' formulary produced and distributed by the Surrey family health services authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Family health services authorities should encourage voluntary formulary development and use. Where, like Surrey, FHSAs provide GPs locally with a core formulary it is their responsibility to monitor its use and effectiveness.

Pharmaceutical Products

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his assessment of the likely effects of health authorities wholesaling pharmaceutical products to family health services authority contractors.

Mr. Dorrell: We are currently considering whether to issue guidance to health authorities.

Health Authorities (Deficits)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which district health authorities have underlying deficits in 1990-91; and which will not have cleared these by the start of 1991-92.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate, on the basis of figures presently available to him, the district health authorities likely to run into deficit at the end of the present financial year; and if he will give in each case his estimate of that deficit.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 December 1990]: An underlying deficit is a measure of the extent to which health authorities have been incurring recurrent expenditure in excess of their recurrent income. This represents bad financial management and has been criticised by the Public Accounts Committee of the House. In the planning guidance for 1990-91 issued in July 1989 health authorities were advised to eliminate such imbalances. As a result, the number of districts in deficit has fallen from 122 in 1989-90 to an end-of-September estimate of 51 for 1990-91. The districts forecasting deficits together with an estimate of the deficit at that date are set out in the table.

All of these are taking action in 1990-91 to tackle their problems. It is not yet possible to reach a definite view, but we believe that nearly all will have cleared deficits by the start of 1991-92. This is a major achievement and means that nearly all districts will enter 1991-92 on a sound financial basis which will enable them to take full advantage of the opportunities which the reforms to the NHS offer to improve the health of their residents.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure has been incurred by his Department in ensuring slaughterhouses in Northern Ireland meet European Community standards.

Mr. Needham: During the five-year period ended 31 March 1990, capital grant assistance of £4,554,502 has been paid to the eight privately owned beef slaughter and processing companies in Northern Ireland which have facilities approved to Economic Community hygiene standards.

All these companies have abattoirs with integrated further processing facilities and the grant assistance paid was mainly towards expenditure on buildings and equipment for meat processing. Only two of the companies received grant payments totalling £252,300 towards abattoir capital expenditure. In no case was grant provided solely towards abattoir expenditure to achieve European Community standards.

Electrostatic Data Analysis Testing

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the reasons for the delay in the report on the ESDA test on the evidence relating to the case concerning four members of the Ulster Defence Regiment from Armagh, and ordered by the chief constable on 31 July.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report has been delayed by the need to subject a large volume of material to detailed and thorough examination; but I understand that the work is now virtually complete and that the Northern Ireland forensic laboratory expects to be able to submit its findings to the Royal Ulster Constabulary shortly.

Fair Employment

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of the fair employment implications of the loss of 20 action for community employment jobs in west Belfast.

Mr. Needham: There has been no net loss of ACE jobs in west Belfast.

Disabled People

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals (a) over 65 years, (b) physically disabled and (c) mentally disabled were receiving hospital, residential or nursing home care in each year since 1985 in each health board area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not available centrally.

District Nursing

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were registered for ongoing treatment through the district nursing system in each health board area in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of patient visits carried out by district nurses.

Political Vetting

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of all instances where public funds have been withdrawn from Northern Ireland organisations under the Government's political vetting policy; how many of the decisions were appealed; and what was the result of each appeal.

Mr. Brooke: There is no political vetting. However, under the terms of the policy reflected in the written reply of 27 June 1985 by the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, public funds have been denied in a total of 26 cases. On further review funding has been restored in four cases. It is not Government policy to reveal details of individual cases.

Glor na nGael

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number and what were the sources of representations he has received in relation to the withdrawal of funds from Glor na nGael.

Mr. Brooke: Written representations have been received from over 150 bodies and individuals including voluntary organisations, interest groups, trade unions, politicians, other public figures and various private individuals both within Northern Ireland and further afield.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been spent by his Department on public safety campaigns encouraging the use of domestic smoke alarms in each of the last five years; how much money is budgeted for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

EC Funds

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much money has been expended in the Ballymoney borough council area by the Northern Ireland Departments apart from money expended under the various EEC funds;

(2) how much money has been expended in the Moyle council area by the Northern Ireland Departments apart from money expended under the various EEC funds;

(3) how much money has been expended in the Ballymena borough council area by the Northern Ireland Departments apart from money expended under the various EEC funds.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 13 December 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations have taken place with energy efficiency projects about the network installer areas under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is open to any organisation engaged in the delivery of energy efficiency services to apply to become a network installer under the home energy efficiency scheme. I understand that, in drawing up the areas for which applications would intially be invited, the Energy Action Grants Agency sought advice from both Neighbourhood Energy Action and Energy Action Scotland.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of the advertising campaign for the flotation of the 12 regional electricity companies of England and Wales.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The costs of the campaign are still being finalised and will be announced to Parliament in the normal manner as soon as they are available.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the cost of the advertising campaign for the flotation of the two generating companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The full costs of the privatisation, including advertising costs, will be made available to Parliament in the normal way.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what policy considerations led him to reject institutional tendering as a method of flotation for the two generating companies in the electricity supply industry of England and Wales;

(2) what policy considerations led him to choose a public offer flotation for the two generating companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Decisions have yet to be taken on the precise structure of the sale of National Power and PowerGen. In intend to float both companies next February, subject to market conditions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, what numbers of employees applied for shares under employee priority application procedures, in each of the 12 regional electricity company areas.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The numbers of employees who applied under the employee priority offers are as follows:

	[1]Number of employee priority applications
Eastern Electricity	4,073
East Midlands Electricity	3,328
London Electricity	2,546
Manweb	2,016

South Wales Electricity	1,559
South Western Electricity	2,741
Yorkshire Electricity	3,050

These figures exclude employees who have applied under the free and matching offers alone.

Gas and Electrical Installations

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department will seek to place upon suppliers of electricity and gas a requirement to carry out periodic checks on all domestic and other installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No. All consumers are responsible for ensuring that the electricity and gas installations on their own premises are safe. The electricity and gas suppliers urge consumers to arrange checks on their installations regularly. This message is reinforced from time to time in newspapers, in billing material and so on. There is adequate guidance available from the suppliers and others.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to make a further non-fossil fuel obligation order in respect of projects involving renewable energy sources.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to the reply, 19 November 1990, c. 7]: In announcing the initial order setting a non-fossil fuel obligation for renewable sources of energy, I noted that a number of projects had proved not yet ready to meet the requirements of the legislation. To give these projects, and any others, an early opportunity to go forward, I have decided to make a second order setting a non-fossil fuel obligation for renewables in 1991. This will specify levels of renewables-sourced electricity generating capacity required to be available to the regional electricity companies, in addition to those required under the initial renewables order (SI 1990 No. 1859), during the period from 1 January 1992 until 31 December 1998.

Before making the order I shall, as required under the legislation, consult the regional electricity companies and the Director General of Electricity Supply.

However, I currently have it in mind that the new order should be set at a level which will require the regional electricity companies to enter into contracts for some 150 to 200 MW DNC of generating capacity. I also have it in mind to introduce separate bands within the order for landfill gas, hydro, waste incineration and wind. This would give each of those technologies an opportunity to make a contribution to the capacity required under the order, and so would promote the Government's objective of stimulating the development and application of renewable sources of energy which have prospects of being economically competitive and environmentally acceptable.

I shall determine the size of the bands, in the light of bids by generators and after the statutory consultations, at a level to strike an appropriate balance between diversity of renewable generating technologies and the cost to the electricity consumer. I may decide, in the light of the consultations, to omit a band or to combine two or more bands. However, I currently have it in mind that the bands, and the band sizes, should be as follows:

	MW DNC
Wind power	25-50
Hydro	5-10
Landfill gas	30-60
Municipal and general industrial waste incineration	50-100
Others (eg. sewage gas, combustion of special waste)	15-30

The bands adopted for the 1991 renewables order will be without prejudice to the format of the further renewables orders that the Government intend to introduce during the 1990s.

My Department, in consultation with the RECs and the Office of Electricity Regulation, has reviewed the procedures for making NFFO orders in the light of the experience gained from the first one. A number of those consulted thought it important that the timetable should be less compressed.

Against this background I propose to make the next order, and to lay it before Parliament, in the autumn of 1991. I understand that the RECs will begin the process of selecting projects in the new year, when they will announce the procedures that they propose to adopt.

My Department is publicising these proposals through "Renewables Energy Bulletin No. 4", a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. MacGregor: No savings would be made and costs could well increase, because time and effort would be involved in wider briefing.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. MacGregor: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in my Department although estimates would be made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold (currently £250). However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972 in which the Department participated an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctic

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions regarding the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities for the Antarctic have been agreed by Britain's representatives at the Santiago convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The situation at the end of the 11th Antarctic treaty special consultative meeting with respect to CRAMRA is set out in paragraph 20 of the interim report of the meeting. I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 12 December, column 421-22, to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) for the text.

Bishop Laslo Tokes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the infringements of the human rights of the Romanian bishop, Laslo Tokes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 14 December, c. 530]: Her Majesty's ambassador in Bucharest has spoken to Bishop Tokes to ascertain his safety and that of his family. Bishop Tokes confirmed that although some threats have been made, he is unharmed and the Romanian authorities are taking an active interest in ensuring his safety.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will bring forward proposals to end controls on local authorities' ability to borrow money to meet local needs;

(2) if he will make it his policy to introduce proposals to replace existing controls on local authority borrowing powers with a statutory requirement to pay back loans from revenue over a minimum period;

(3) what are his reasons for continuing central controls on local authority capital spending; and if he will make a statement on the achievements of this policy.

Mr. Key: No. Local authority capital expenditure which is mainly financed by borrowing amounts to a quarter of all public sector capital expenditure. Since the end of the last century, successive Governments have found it necessary to exercise some control over local authority capital expenditure and borrowing.

Toxic Sites

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made to compile a central index of toxic sites; and when he expects such an index to be available.

Mr. Baldry: The question of compilation of a national list of seriously contaminated and polluting sites was considered in the Government's response to the Select Committee on the Environment's first report on contaminated land. We concluded that this was not a practical possibility. However, we have taken powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to require local authorities to set up public registers of all land in their areas which, because of past or present uses, may be contaminated.

We will consult widely on the scope of these registers and the methods to be used in compiling them. Depending on the outcome of consultations, we hope that authorities will be able to proceed with compilation of registers during 1992-93.

Charitable Housing Associations

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in tabular form the number of houses and flats owned by charitable housing associations in each district or borough in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Yeo: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to respond to my hon. Friend direct.

Special Needs Housing

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make additional funding available to provide the homeless and others with special needs with move-on accommodation to relieve the pressure on existing high-care hostels.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on Monday 17 December 1990, column 24, to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes).

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the expenditure by local housing authorities on energy efficiency measures in homes since 1983.

Mr. Yeo: The following figures show capital expenditure by English local authorities on:

£ million

	Homes Insulation Scheme	Energy conservation work on local authorities' own stock[1]
1983-84	24·9	17·1
1984-85	25·2	17·0
1985-86	27·6	10·5
1986-87	25·2	13·2
1987-88	21·3	15·8
1988-89	7·2	20·2
[2]1989-90	7·0	52·5

[1] Expenditure on specific energy conservation schemes only. It does not include the cost of relevant works, e.g. the installation of insulation etc, which are carried out as part of general conversion or improvement programmes.
[2] Provisional.

Water Quality

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent information on the number of regional water companies that do not comply with EEC regulations on water quality.

Mr. Baldry: All water companies already achieve most of the standards in the Water Quality Regulations, which incorporate the requirements of the EC drinking water directive. Where a standard is not consistently achieved at present, the company has been required to give an undertaking that it will carry out remedial action by the earliest possible date, taking practicalities into account. An up-to-date summary of the position will be given in the first annual report of the drinking water inspectorate, to be published next summer.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures he will implement to encourage local authorities to move towards a target of 50 per cent. recycling of domestic refuse where such treatment of waste is more costly that the traditional landfilling;

(2) if it is proposed that under the Environmental Protection Act, municipal solid waste disposal costs will be compared with municipal solid waste recycling costs;

(3) how the costs for the disposal of municipal solid wastes and recycling will be calculated; and what account will be taken of collection, transport and man hours;

(4) which of the waste disposal authority or its waste collection authority in the event of collection authorities contracting directly with a waste recycler will be financially liable for the costs of an operation.

Mr. Baldry: My Department will be consulting early next year about the new duty on waste disposal authorities to pay credits in respect of the costs of disposal of household waste avoided by recycling. We are currently developing a method for the calculation of credits. It will be up to each organisation which undertakes recycling to assess viability in the light of costs, benefits and credits available. We do not expect recycling to take place where it is economically and environmentally unviable.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how authorities' assets will be valued before being transferred to a local authority waste disposal contractor; and what liabilities will be attached to existing landfill sites as an ongoing financial responsibility for such local authority waste disposal contractors.

Mr. Baldry: Advice on valuation of assets will be included in a draft circular giving advice on the new arrangements for waste disposal under the Environmental Protection Act and on local authority waste disposal companies. This draft circular should be available early in the new year. Full liability for restoration and after-care costs of existing landfill sites will transfer with sites.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how duty of care responsibilities under the Environmental Protection Act will affect landfill sites currently operating, but with many years' capacity still open to them.

Mr. Baldry: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 contains new measures whereby a licensee may not surrender his licence without the consent of the Waste Regulation Authority, and that consent may not be given unless the authority is satisfied that the condition of the land is unlikely to cause pollution of the environment or harm to human health. The licensee will therefore remain responsible for the monitoring of the land and any remedial action necessary until the authority accepts the surrender and issues a certificate of completion. The licensee will need to ensure that the resources to enable him to meet these obligations are set aside during the active, revenue-earning, phase of the landfill. Licences already issued under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 will automatically become waste management licences when the relevant sections of the Environmental Protection Act are implemented, and they will be subject to the provisions of the new Act.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the housing investment programme bids received, and the agreed level of programme, by his Department for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Yeo: The table compares local authorities' bids with the capital allocations, which provide part of the available resources to fund capital expenditure, and actual outturn.

Local authority housing capital expenditure: England: £ million

	Proposed programme	HIP allocation[1]	Gross expenditure outturn
1982-83	3,480	2,192	2,483
1983-84	3,560	2,233	3,176
1984-85	4,480	1,852	3,187
1985-86	4,870	1,605	2,802
1986-87	5,420	1,459	2,883
1987-88	6,040	1,400	3,151
1988-89	6,650	1,331	3,470
1989-90	6,330	1,095	[3]4,442
1990-91	6,500	[2]1,913	N.A.
1991-92	[3]6,020	[2]1,861	N.A.

[1] For the years up to 1989-90 Housing Investment Programme allocations made by the Department relate to the borrowing approvals available to local authorities to finance their housing capital programmes. In addition capital expenditure could be financed from capital receipts (subject to certain conditions) and from revenue sources. A new capital finance system was introduced for 1990-91 in which the HIP allocations comprise annual capital guidelines and resources for specified capital grants. A proportion of local authorities' usable receipts are then taken into account in arriving at a figure for the basic credit approval which permits borrowing.

[2] Allocations made to date for these two years.

[3] provisional.

Water Supply

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he has made for the enforcement of the general duties placed on water companies by sections 37 and 67 of the Water Act 1989 to provide water supply and sewerage in their areas.

Mr. Trippier: These duties hitherto have been enforceable by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales. Under a general authorisation given by my right hon. Friends, they are now enforceable by the Director General of Water Services, and he will deal with any complaint that a company has not fulfilled its statutory duties.

Environmental Organisations

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish details of the new fund to help finance voluntary organisations in the furtherance of policies set out in "This Common Inheritance," (Cm. 1200); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish details of the new fund to help finance voluntary organisations in the furtherance of policies set out in "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am very pleased to announce that my Department has today issued invitations to voluntary groups to apply for project funding under the new environmental grant fund. The grant is available exclusively for projects which will help to further the policies set out in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance", published in September 1990.

We are eager to use the new fund to support practical projects at the local level. We will particularly favour projects which show innovations or which involve new groups in environmental work. Funding will normally be in the form of a 50 per cent. contribution to the overall project cost with an unlimited proportion of this being available to meet capital costs. Projects can be funded for up to three years and will be closely monitored to assess their effectiveness.

In order to bring the scheme quickly into operation, we have decided for this first year only to restrict applications to national and regional organisations. We will be discussing with the voluntary sector how the scheme might be extended for future years to target local groups directly.

In this first year £650,000 is available. In 1993-94 when the fund is fully operational £1·5 million will be available.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in regard to Leicester city council under part I of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has today issued a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 requiring Leicester city council to expose refuse collection work to competitive tendering again by 1 November 1991. He has taken this action because he was not satisfied with the response which Leicester city council made to the notice served on 11 September 1990 under section 13 of the Act.

That notice set out the Secretary of State's view that Leicester city council had acted contrary to the requirement of section 7(7) of the Act (which is that, in reaching a decision to assign work to its own work force, an authority must not act in a manner having the effect or intended or likely to have the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition) in that, in assessing the cost of accepting a tender from an external contra[illegible] it took account of certain fixed overhead costs.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in regard to Thurrock borough council under part I of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has today issued a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 requiring Thurrock borough council to expose street cleaning work to competitive tendering again by 1 November 1991. He has taken this action because he was not satisfied with the response which Thurrock borough council made to the notice served on 3 October 1990 under section 13 of the Act.

That notice set out the Secretary of State's view that Thurrock borough council had acted contrary to the requirement of section 7(7) of the Act (which is that, in reaching a decision to assign work to its own work force, an authority must not act in a manner having the effect or intended or likely to have the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition) in that, in assessing the cost of accepting a tender from an external contractor, it took account of certain fixed overhead costs.

Homelessness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for discontinuation of the leasing by borough or district councils of private houses for temporary accommodation for homeless persons; what consultation he has had with boroughs principally affected; and what study he has made concerning the effects of implementing his proposal.

Sir George Young [pursuant to the reply, 18 December 1990, column 114-15]: The housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1991-92 have been made today. They cover the assumptions the Government will make about rents and management and maintenance and other rules governing the calculation of each authority's subsidy entitlement. I am placing copies of the determinations in the Library.

The determinations also confirm, with modifications, the new rules for subsidy on short-term leasing that were proposed in October. Local authorities have increasingly taken private houses and flats on short-term leases to provide temporary refuge for the homeless. The Government had not proposed to discontinue this. On the contrary, I want to ensure that the rules regulating councils' entitlement to subsidy on this activity leave them with the flexibility they need, and I have therefore had extensive consultations with local authorities and their representatives. In response to their views, I have had a fresh look at the rules proposed in October and am today announcing two modifications.

The first is a proposal designed to help those authorities which are worried by the numbers of short-term leases approaching the end of their terms. To assist them with renewal or replacement, the rent they pay from 1 April next would be subsidisable up to a cash limit for each authority. The total national cost would be up to £25 million, to be found by a transfer from the estate action programme. I am putting this forward today as a proposal for consultation, and my Department is inviting responses from authorities by 19 January.

The second modification (on which we have already consulted) recognises that short-term leases are not necessarily appropriate in the permanent housing account. They may be used for the same purpose as licensed accommodation and bed-and-breakfast provision, both of which are financed from the general fund with underlying assistance from revenue support grant. The Department is prepared to give authorities special directions to take named leases outside the housing account, and we are today telling authorities of the criteria that must be met if they wish to apply. Leases taken outside the housing account will benefit from the same rent rebate subsidy arrangements as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security will be introducing for rebates for tenants in bed-and-breakfast or licensed accommodation.

On the subsidy allowances for management and maintenance expenditure, we are introducing a system that targets allowances on those authorities with the greatest problems in maintaining their estates. I have decided to introduce this targeting slightly more quickly than was proposed in October, through a larger redistribution of resources from authorities with the least needs to those in greatest need. As a result, about 40 rather than 20 authorities will receive higher increases in allowances. Overall the level of allowances will be increased in order to maintain them at this year's levels in real terms.

For rent guidelines, my right hon. Friend confirms the proposals for an average rent increase of 2 per cent. above the allowance for inflation. This means an average increase of £1·85 over the guideline rents which applied this year ranging from £1·38 to £2·50 in individual councils. It is for each council to determine its actual rent level and how much to spend on management and maintenance of stock.

My right hon. Friend also confirms the proposal to reduce the allowance for the rent lost on empty properties to a flat rate of 2 per cent. of dwellings.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning his policy towards single, homeless people.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 18 December 1990]: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer given yesterday by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Dykes), Official Report, vol. 183, column 119.

Hostel Beds

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new hostel beds have come into existence as a result of measures announced on 22 June.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given yesterday by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Dykes) Official Report, vol. 183, column 119.

TRANSPORT

Airports

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the 1991-92 supplementary credit approvals for public airport companies and local authority airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State noted in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 26 November at column 270, that supplementary credit approvals totalling £87 million will be available for public airport companies and local authority airports for 1991-92. Taken with other resources which public airport companies expect to invest, the total will assist the airports concerned to provide facilities which they estimate could cost some £179 million in 1991-92.

At this stage, we have agreed supplementary credit approvals totalling £70 million. The remainder will be issued as the year progresses. Major projects concerned include the continuation of work on phase 1 of terminal 2 at Manchester airport and joint venture projects with the private sector at Birmingham airport. Formal supplementary credit approvals for these and other projects will be issued to the local authorities shortly.

The £87 million total of borrowing approvals for 1991-92 represents the second successive large increase, from £29 million in 1989-90 and £59 million in 1990-91. But these increases reflect the investment profile for phase 1 of Manchester airport's second terminal. Supplementary credit approvals will reduce substantially in the next two years and beyond, as that project is completed, and as the pressure on public sector spending continues.

Local authority airports need to expand to meet a growing share of the demand for air travel, but to do so they will have to look increasingly to the private sector to take a stake in the success and the risk associated with particular projects.

Fire Extinguishers (Solvent Abuse)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reported incidents have there been of people using British Rail fire extinguishers for solvent abuse for each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's railway inspectorate has no records of such incidents, which are not reportable by railway operators unless they result in personal injury or fatality on railway premises.

Hazardous Substances (Transportation)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the enforcement procedures adopted by his Department relating to the transportation of (a) inflammable and (b) hazardous material by road.

Mr. Chope: Enforcement of the dangerous goods regulations is carried out by the Health and Safety Executive with the assistance of the police and the Department's traffic examiners. The main thrust of the Health and Safety Executive's inspection and enforcement policy is to consider and assess compliance during visits to employers and duty holders' premises. These visits are supplemented by roadside checks.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current standards and regulations which apply to the transportation of (a) inflammable and (b) hazardous material by road.

Mr. Chope: The regulations, which cover all dangerous goods, are:

The Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981.
The Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984.
The Road Traffic (Carriage of Dangerous Substances in Packages etc) Regulations 1986.
The Road Traffic (Carriage of Explosives) Regulations 1989.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a national accident database for accidents involving the road transportation of hazardous and inflammable materials; how many such accidents have taken place within a 30-mile radius of Southampton in the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Health and Safety Executive maintains a database which contains information on those incidents reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations. The numbers reported in HSE's area south, which covers Hampshire, Dorset, Berkshire and the Isle of Wight were:

	Number
1988-89	12
1989-90	[1]14

Expressways

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the schemes which are expressways as defined under the European agreement on main international traffic arteries.

Mr. Chope: The European agreement on main international traffic arteries defines three types of road: motorways, express roads and ordinary roads. The concept of the express road is not contained in English domestic law, but, in practice, there is no distinction between motorways and express roads as defined in the agreement.

Fengate Industrial Estate

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the recommendations of the Health and Safety Executive report of March 1989 into the Fengate industrial estate in Peterborough have been implemented; what additional resources have been made available to the Health and Safety Executive to undertake this matter; what additional arrangements have been made for the transportation of explosives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Road Traffic (Carriage of Explosives) Regulations were made in July 1989. These regulations and the recommendations in the report are being reviewed by the Health and Safety Commission with industry and the fire services.

The resource needs of the HSE are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in descending order the London boroughs by proportion of highway in each borough with bus lanes.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table. Boroughs in which there are no bus lanes are not listed.

Bus lanes in London boroughs: 1990

	Length of bus lanes (km)	Metres of bus lane per km of road

Light Bulbs

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage the use of low-energy light bulbs in his Department's offices and other buildings.

Mr. McLoughlin: Guidance on the use of low-energy light fittings has been issued throughout this Department and has already been applied in a number of its buildings.

Wembley Stadium (Underpass)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department next intends to meet officials from Wembley stadium to discuss the safety of the pedestrian underpass to the underground station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Transport has no immediate plans to meet officials from Wembley statium. Several meetings have been held. The underpass is the responsibility of the London borough of Brent. We have provided in the 1991-92 local roads capital expenditure settlement, announced on 17 December, supplementary credit approval to enable the borough to fund a scheme to improve the underpass. I understand that Wembly plc is willing to contribute to the cost.

Severn River Crossing

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the concession agreement recently signed in London on 29 October by the Minister for Public Transport and senior representatives of Laing, G. T. M. Entropeae, Barclay de Zoete Wedd, the Bank of America, and the shareholders of Severn River Crossing plc.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 December 1990]: Copies of the concession agreement between my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and Severn River Crossing plc concerning the provision of the second Severn bridge have today been placed in the House Library. Copies are also being made available to the appropriate local authorities.

THE ARTS

Public Libraries

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) how he implements his superintendent powers over public libraries;

(2) how he ensures the efficient operation of each public library authority as required by the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964.

Mr. Renton: Statistics published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy which provide information on the public library service in England are monitored by my office, which collects supplementary information direct from the local authorities. I investigate any complaints about public library authorities through my professional library adviser. It is for the district auditor to satisfy himself that arrangements are in place within local authorities to secure value for money.

In furtherance of my responsibilities to promote the improvement of the library service, I have produced two management tools on costing systems and performance indicators. A third, on objectives, will be published next year. In addition, I have awarded grants totalling £603,549 for 30 projects under my public library development incentive scheme. I also support research into public library provision leading to the publication of case studies and examples of good practice.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Allason: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since an announcement was last made on the subject to the House.

Mr. Renton: Since the announcement made on 15 November at column 188, I am pleased to announce that a further offer has been accepted in principle. The offer is of a Sevres dinner service of some 350 pieces and a Louis

XV bas d'armoire by Bernard Van Risenburgh and will satisfy £1·4 million tax. The acceptance of this offer will be made possible by a call on the reserve.

Regional Arts Boards

Mr. Cash: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress is being made in establishing regional arts boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made earlier today.

CIVIL SERVICE

Correspondence

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he expects to be able to announce the result of the Cabinet Office Efficiency Unit's inquiry into the handling of ministerial correspondence with hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: With the approval of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, the report of the efficiency scrutiny on ministerial correspondence is being made available to Members of Parliament and others today. Copies may be obtained from the Vote Office.

An efficiency scrutiny was set up in July to review the methods and costs of handling ministerial correspondence, to identify good methods of operation and to make recommendations for adoption by all Departments. In carrying out its work, the scrutiny team sought the views of Members of Parliament, Ministers and officials in Departments and members of the public.

The task of Government Departments in dealing with correspondence is a very substantial one. Ministers respond to nearly 250,000 letters a year from Members of Parliament, and many more letters from the public receive official replies. The nature and volume of correspondence varies a great deal from Department to Department. Some have a heavy case load of letters which require detailed investigation of a constituent's case before a reply can be sent. A topical issue can stimulate with little warning huge influxes of letters with which Departments do not have the resources to deal and these add to the work load of Ministers and civil servants who are already busy preparing or implementing a policy. The scrutiny estimates that the cost of dealing with ministerial correspondence is of the order of £17·5 million per annum.

Because Departments differ both in their organisation and in the nature and volume of their correspondence, the scrutiny does not recommend a single formula for dealing with letters, nor does it propose that uniform targets should be set, independently of the nature of each Departments' work, for the time taken to reply. The recommendations are essentially a menu of good practice, on which Departments will draw according to their particular circumstances. On this basis, the Government accept the report, which Departments will now consider with the aim of further improving their service to Members and their constituents, while making efficient use of available resources and providing better value for money.

While recognising that Members of Parliament always have, and retain, the right of approaching Ministers directly, the report recommends that one important way of achieving a more efficient service is through greater decentralisation of correspondence on operational matters to agency chief executives and local offices, who have delegated responsibility for particular areas of work and can deal with Members' inquiries on day-to-day matters quickly and efficiently. The Government accept the recommendation that Members need better information on contact points, and proposes to extend future editions of the "List of Ministerial Responsibilities" to include agency chief executives and other key addresses.

Other recommendations are designed to improve the way in which Departments manage correspondence and monitor their performance. They encourage more effective use of targets, and aim to increase Departments' awareness of the costs in dealing with correspondence, cutting out such factors as multiple handling and unnecessary retyping which add to costs and delay without improving the quality of replies. A need for more effective use of information technology is also identified. The report recommends that Departments consider making greater use of briefing notes for Members of Parliament to use in response to correspondence campaigns, and on other occasions when a large volume of letters is received on a single subject.

Each Department will produce within three months an action plan for responding to the report.

Non-departmental Bodies

Sir Philip Goodhart: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many non-departmental bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Renton: On 1 April 1990, there were 1,539 public bodies. That is 16 fewer than last year and 628 fewer than in 1979. These bodies are listed in "Public Bodies 1990", published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

In the year to 31 March 1990, 67 bodies were abolished and 51 new bodies set up.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Productivity

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the United Kingdom manufacturing productivity figures for 1979, and the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Data on United Kingdom manufacturing productivity can be obtained from the CSO database, which is accessible from the House of Commons Library.

Public Sector (Manning)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reduce manning in the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Future plans for manpower in the civil service and the armed forces were published in table 21.3.11 of chapter 21 of the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1021). The Government do not plan manpower in local authorities or public corporations, but outturn data for the whole of the public sector for the period 1978-79 to 1988-89 were provided in appendix D of the same chapter. Over that period, public sector manpower fell from 6,565,000 to 5,361,000, a reduction of 18·3 per cent.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the latest year for which figures are available what is the total (a) capital spending and (b) revenue spending for (i) local authorities, (ii) Government Departments and (iii) other bodies included in the public expenditure totals.

Mr. Mellor: The latest analyses of public expenditure by economic category were published in the "Supplementary Analyses" chapter (chapter 21) of the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1021). Tables 21.3.5 and 21.4.7 give details of the components of current expenditure (pay, other expenditure on goods and services, subsidies and grants) and capital expenditure (net expenditure on assets, grants and lending and other financial transactions) for central Government's own expenditure and expenditure by local authorities respectively. Similar analyses of the other components of the public expenditure planning total are given in tables 21.4.1 (central Government support for local authorities), 21.5.5 (nationalised industries) and 21.5.12 (other public corporations). Updates of this information will be published in the statistical supplement to the autumn statement, the successor to the "Supplementary Analyses" chapter of the public expenditure White Paper, early in 1991.

Friendly Societies

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made on implementing the proposals in the Green Paper entitled "Friendly Societies: A New Framework".

Mr. Maples: Preparations for the proposed legislation are well in hand. The bulk of the instructions to counsel have been drafted and are today being sent to the Friendly Societies Liaison Committee and other interested parties for consultation. We also plan to consult on the draft clauses when they are available. A Bill will be brought forward in a future Session, when the parliamentary timetable permits.

The draft instructions reflect a number of modifications to the proposals in the Green Paper, in the light of the responses received. Most are technical, but the main policy changes are:

(1) the proposed legislation will not include a statutory requirement for friendly societies to stand behind their subsidiaries, but it will include a power for them to meet the liabilities of a subsidiary;

(2) the voting requirements for a decision to set up subsidiaries will be significantly modified. Only a special resolution of the society will be needed, but there will be provisions to ensure that all reasonable steps are taken to inform members of the vote in good time beforehand;

(3) there will be no statutory limit on the proportion of its funds a society can invest in its subsidiaries. But there will be provisions to ensure that the financing of subsidiaries is transparent to members and to the regulator and does not deplete the insurance funds below a prescribed margin of solvency;

(4) there will be a more flexible approach to solvency requirements, with different requirements for different classes of society according to the nature of their activities and powers of investment.

The legislation will also contain enhanced prudential powers for the regulator to intervene where the interests of members are at risk. In preparing the instructions to counsel, we have concluded that it would be more appropriate for these and other prudential powers to be vested in a commission rather than the Chief Registrar, and will be consulting the friendly societies on that proposal.

HMSO

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial target he has set Her Majesty's Stationery Office for 1991.

Mr. Maples: I have today laid a further Treasury minute setting HMSO the financial target for 1991 of achieving a profit after interest in current cost accounting terms of £4 million. This compares with the target for 1990 of a profit after interest in current cost accounting terms of £2·9 million.

Mrs. V. Chinnock

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what further information his Department is seeking from the senior medical officer of the civil service occupational health service in relation to the benefit payable to Mrs. V. Chinnock of Merle Dene, Hunsdon road, Ivybridge, Devon, as a result of the injuries sustained by her husband in the royal dockyard in 1975; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to finalise the award granted under the injury benefit provisions of the principal civil service pension scheme to Mrs. V. Chinnock of Merle Dene, Hunsdon road, Ivybridge, Devon, as a result of the injuries sustained by her husband in the royal dockyard in 1975;

(3) when payment will begin of the benefit due to Mrs. V. Chinnock of Merle Dene, Hunsdon road, Ivybridge, Devon, as a result of the injuries sustained by her husband in the royal dockyard in 1975;

(4) whether his pensions office has assessed the amount of benefit payable to Mrs. V. Chinnock of Merle Dene, Hunsdon road, Ivybridge, Devon, as set out in his letter of 22 August to the hon. Member for South Hams.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement explained in his letter of 22 August, Mrs. Chinnock's claim to an injury benefit award has been accepted. The award has now been finalised and will be put into payment very shortly, together with arrears due to her since her husband's death.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Exchequer of allowing mortgage interest relief at the higher rate of income tax.

Mr. Maude: The cost of mortgage interest relief at a rate in excess of the basic rate of income tax in 1990-91 is provisionally estimated at £520 million. This estimate is based on the assumption that interest rates remain at their current levels.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of mortgage interest relief during 1988-89.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 December 1990]: The total value of mortgage interest relief in 1988-89 is estimated as £5,400 million.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show the total value of mortgage interest relief during 1989-90 by economic planning region.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 December 1990]: Broad estimates, based on the regional distribution of mortgage interest relief recorded in the family expenditure survey for 1988 and 1989, are as follows:

Mortgage interest relief 1989-90

	£ million
Northern	320
Yorkshire and Humberside	470
North West	680
East Midlands	430
West Midlands	550
East Anglia	280
Greater London	1,000
Other South East	1,730
South West	660
Wales	230
Scotland	470
Northern Ireland	80
United Kingdom	6,900

Charities

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that the Royal National Lifeboat Institute and other registered charities will remain zero-rated for VAT.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Charities as such are not zero-rated, but they benefit from various VAT reliefs on certain supplies they make and on certain goods and services they buy in, which are zero-rated by virtue of their intended use. The Government oppose any proposals for the single market which would further restrict the United Kingdom's ability to use zero rates. EC decisions in tax matters require the unanimous agreement of member states, and there is no question of any unwelcome proposals being forced upon us.

Alcohol (Duty)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the rates of duty are per centilitre of alcohol for (a) beer, (b) wine and (c) spirits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The excise duty per centilitre of pure alcohol would be about 10·2p for a typical beer or table wine, and 17·35p for spirits.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the yield to the Exchequer would be if the rate of duty for beer and wine were increased to that of spirits; by how much the price of a pint of beer and a bottle of wine would rise; and what would be the effect on the retail price index.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The extra yield to the Exchequer if the rate of duty per unit of alcohol on beer and wine were increased to that of spirits would be £1½ billion in 1991-92. The price of a typical pint of beer and a 75 cl bottle of table wine would rise by about 18p and 69p respectively. The impact effect on the retail price index would be to raise it by around 1 per cent. in total.

Income Tax

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the threshold for the payment of higher rate income tax would be if it were restored to its 1988 level in real terms; and what the cost to the Exchequer would be of so restoring it.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that the basic rate limit for 1990-91 would be £22,900 of taxable income it if were set at its 1988-89 level after allowing for the movement in the retail prices index between the two financial years. The direct revenue cost would be about £500 million in a full year.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax write-off British banks have been allowed against expected non-repayment of third-world debt.

Mr. Maude: Estimates of the reduction in mainstream corporation tax receipts for provisions on doubtful sovereign debt are negligible for the years to 1985-86 inclusive, about £70 million for 1986-87, about £¼ billion for 1987-88, over £½ billion for 1988-89 and about £⅓ billion for 1989-90.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Governors and Managers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the reasons for his decision not to give to his Department responsibility for providing advice to governors and managers.

Mr. Fallon: The Department has produced and supported a number of publications and training materials to help school governors, including a loose-leaf handbook supplied to all governors giving information about their responsibilities. Local education authorities also need to provide detailed information and training for governors, as required by the Education (No. 2) Act 1986. The Department encourages their efforts through the grants for education support and training programme, which will cover some £24 million of expenditure on governor support in the four years to 1993.

School Libraries

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the latest available information on the resourcing of school libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Latest outturn data on local authority recurrent spending are from 1988-89. They do not separately identify total spending on school libraries. In that year spending on library books and on non-printed library materials was included within the £331 million of spending on books, equipment and materials in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England. Spending on school librarians was included within the £304 million of spending on school support staff.

National Association of Governors and Managers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding has been made available to the National Association of Governors and Managers by his Department; and if it is his intention to provide a secretariat for the National Association of Governors and Managers.

Mr. Fallon: The Department contributed £8,000 per annum in 1988-89 and 1989-90 towards the cost of improving NAGM's administration; up to £40,000 is available in the current year in support of longer-term restructuring to enable NAGM to become an effective national organisation. My right hon. and learned Friend will consider any further proposals which are based on a sound business plan designed to move the association as quickly as possible towards self-sufficiency.

Key Stage 4

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received (a) for and (b) against key stage 4 of the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. It is not a question of being for or against key stage 4, but how all the objectives of the national curriculum for 14 to 16-year-old pupils can best be met within the study time available.

School Budgets

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the most recent estimate of the proportion of the potential school budget being delegated to schools in each local education authority in (a) inner London and (b) outer London.

Mr. Fallon: Figures are as follows, taken from budget statements for 1990-91 published by local education authorities under section 42 of the Education Reform Act. The figures are applicable only for authorities with statutory schemes for the local management of schools. There are no figures for four outer London boroughs; three of these do not as yet have statutory LMS schemes in force (Croydon, Hillingdon and Newham). Waltham Forest has not yet published its section 42 budget statement. Westminster is currently the only inner London LEA with a statutory LMS scheme.

LEA	Proportion of the PSB[1] delegated to schools
Barnet	84·36
Havering	83·87
Brent	83·63
Sutton	83·44
Redbridge	82·71
Ealing	81·66
Hounslow	81·59
Harrow	81·52
Enfield	81·50
Bexley	81·33
Bromley	80·70
Richmond	79·98
Merton	79·79
Haringey	79·36
Kingston	78·46
Barking	77·98
Westminster	77·97

[1] PSB = General Schools Budget minus mandatory exceptions, school meals, home to school transport, and transitional exceptions.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he intends to give to local authorities about the supply of irradiated food in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: No specific guidance on the use of irradiated food in schools is being issued. In common with all other catering establishments, local education authorities which choose to use irradiated products will be required so to inform consumers under the Food Labelling (Amendment) (Irradiated Food) Regulations 1990.

Agencies

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has identified any candidates within his Department for agency status under the "next steps" initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following a detailed feasibility study, I have identified pensions branch within my Department, located in Darlington, as a candidate for agency status.

Agency status should enable pensions branch to operate with greater freedom and clearer responsibility towards specified targets and performance measures within an agreed framework of resources. It should increase the accountability of the managers within the branch and lead to improvements in the quality as well as the cost-effectiveness of the service provided to teachers and their employers.

I have set in hand the recruitment through open competition of a new head of pensions branch, who will be appointed as the chief executive designate.

A "next steps" unit has been set up within my Department to co-ordinate further work on the project, and the preparation of a draft agency document has been put in hand. If the final decision is that this part of my Department should become an agency, the aim would be to establish it not later than early 1992.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the level of funding for universities and polytechnics in 1979 and 1989, respectively (a) as a percentage of gross domestic product, (b) in real terms and (c) in terms of resources per student at constant prices, together with the numbers of students, other than from overseas.

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 14 December 1990]: Consistent information in the form requested is not available for years prior to 1980-81. Public funding of universities in Great Britain from recurrent grant and home and EC student tuition fees and local authority expenditure on higher education (net of estimated overseas student fees and miscellaneous other income) in England have increased from £2,821 million in financial year 1980-81 to £2,968 million in 1988-89, both at 1989-90 prices, 0·7 per cent. and 0·6 per cent. of GDP respectively. Over that period, full-time equivalent home and EC student numbers increased from 469,200 to 578,900 and funding per student reflected efficiency gains by decreasing from £6,012 to £5,127, again at 1989-90 prices.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fireworks

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make inquiries of those European countries which have national training schemes for organisers of public firework displays with a view to setting up such a scheme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: To require organisers of public firework displays to be formally trained would discourage many smaller local displays which I want to encourage the public to attend on safety grounds. However, a large manufacturer of fireworks already offers a voluntary training scheme, which I would encourage organisers to attend.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that category 3 and 4 fireworks can be bought only from licensed outlets.

Mr. Leigh: By voluntary agreement, category 4 fireworks are not sold through retail outlets. Also, my Department has asked the industry not to sell through retail outlets those category 3 fireworks which require a safe distance of a full 25 m because they are likely to be too powerful for the average back garden.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the operation of the 1975 fireworks code; and if he has any plans to strengthen the voluntary agreement not to sell fireworks until three weeks before 5 November.

Mr. Leigh: I am satisfied on the basis of the recent decline in the number of firework accidents that the existing fireworks code and the voluntary agreement on the period of retail sale of fireworks are proving to be adequate.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many civil servants are currently employed (a) full time and (b) part time by his Department on (i) home defence planning, (ii) emergency planning, (iii) liaison with the NATO central supplies agency and (iv) work connected with the NATO industrial planning committee.

Mr. Leigh: This work is shared between a group of seven staff in my Department. Three of these are also engaged on other duties and one works part time, making a total equivalent of five full-time staff.

Much of the work of the NATO industrial planning committee concerns planning for the establishment and operation of the Central Supplies Agency, which would become operational only in times of crisis and war. The amount of staff time allocated to each subject varies with the work load, but currently it is approximately as follows:

	Percentage
Home Defence Planning	25
Civil Emergency Planning	35
Work connected with the NATO Industrial Planning Committee and the establishment and operation of the Central Supplies Agency	40

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the estimated cost in the current financial year and in 1991-92 of the programme of sectoral studies announced by his Department at the workshop on local authority essential needs in crisis and war, held on 4 September.

Mr. Leigh: In this financial year we estimate spending £65,000 on the programme of sectoral studies. In view of the consistency of the findings of the studies completed so far, we concluded that doing further studies would not be worth while so we terminated the programme. Therefore, there will be no expenditure on the programme in 1991-92.

Credit (Marketing)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to improve standards in the marketing of credit.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have over an extended period made known their view that there is a need for an improvement in credit marketing practices. They welcome the statements about the marketing and provision of credit in the draft code of banking practice and, in particular, the statement that banks and building societies will act responsibly and prudently in the marketing and advertising of credit. However, a code which applies only to banks and building societies cannot be a complete answer to the problem of irresponsible practices in the credit market. The consultation paper on the draft code acknowledges this.

The Government have concluded that there is a need to tighten the legislation on consumer credit. The Department of Trade and Industry is today issuing a consultative document which gives details of proposals for new regulations under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and also for amending the Act itself. It is proposed to make four new sets of regulations under the Act.

First, the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations 1989 are to be amended. The main changes will be to require advertisers to provide additional information in particular about the affordability of credit and the risks of variable interest rate agreements. In addition, advertisements for residential property loans which mention the availability of certain related services from or through the lender will need to include a statement that loans are available whether or not the related services are taken from or through the lender.

Secondly, the Consumer Credit (Agreements) Regulations 1983 are to be amended. It is proposed that, with certain exceptions, regulated credit agreements will in future have to include the statement "Do not sign this agreement unless you are sure that you can afford the payments". In addition, advertisements for secured loans and foreign currency loans will have to include warnings about the special risks entailed in this type of borrowing.

Thirdly, new regulations on the conduct of consumer credit business will require businesses licensed under the Consumer Credit Act to take precautions in the direct mailing of credit circulars to reduce the risk of such circulars going to minors or to people who do not wish to receive them. In addition, there will be a ban on making unsolicited increases in credit limits.

The conduct of business regulations will also prohibit the use by licensed consumer credit businesses of negative options (and other techniques which rely on consumer inertia) to sell credit-related services. The decision to legislate on inertia selling was taken only after careful consideration of the proposals by the finance and insurance industries for a code of practice on the use of negative options to sell payment protection insurance. Whilst the code would have gone a considerable way to guard against the risk of consumers being induced to buy insurance which they did not really want, the Government consider it to be a matter of principle that consumers should not be charged for services which they have not positively and expressly requested.

Fourthly, a new regulation on pre-agreement disclosure of information will require lenders under regulated credit agreements which are secured on property to explain to prospective borrowers the commitment entailed in variable interest rates.

In addition to making these regulations, the Government intend, as soon as legislative time is available, to introduce a Bill to improve the protection provided by provisions in the Consumer Credit Act 1974 on sending credit circulars to minors and on cancellation rights as well as making the important deregulatory changes announced in the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" in November 1988.

Section 50 of the Act, which prohibits the sending of unsolicited credit circulars to minors, is to be made more effective. There have been a number of complaints from parents whose children have received credit circulars. Lenders and intermediaries who breach the prohibition can shelter behind the defence which section 50(2) provides for a person who has sent a circular to a minor if he can prove that he "did not know and had no reasonable cause to suspect" that the person to whom he sent it was a minor. It is therefore proposed to remove this defence, but not the defence under section 168 that the person who sent the circular to a minor

"took all reasonable precautions and exercised all due diligence to avoid such an act".

The effect of removing the section 50(2) defence would therefore be to require those issuing credit circulars to take reasonable precautions and exercise due diligence.

It is also proposed to extend the cancellation rights provided by section 67 and 68 to cover debtor-creditor-supplier agreements (as defined in section 12 of the Act) if they are signed on trade premises following face-to-face negotiations. The aim of this proposal is to allow consumers the right to cancel credit agreements which they may have entered into on impulse without giving sufficient thought as to their ability to make the repayments. In order to reduce the inconvenience which may be caused by the unwillingness of traders to allow consumers to have goods or services before the end of the cooling-off period, the cooling-off period for this new category of cancellable agreements will be only two days rather than the five days which applies to other cancellable agreements.

The 1988 White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" proposed that protection against extortionate credit bargains should be strengthened by allowing a court to reopen a credit agreement of its own motion. It remains the Government's intention to amend the Act in this way. In addition, the Director General of Fair Trading has been asked to report on whether there is a need for any other reforms of the Act's provisions on extortionate credit agreements.

Copies of the consultative document have been placed in the Library, and also copies will be available from the Vote Office.

Northern Ireland Railways Ltd.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Monopolies Commission report on Northern Ireland Railways Ltd. will be published.

Mr. Redwood: The report is published today. The commission found that Northern Ireland Railways was not pursuing any course of conduct which operated against the public interest.

The commission recognised the dedication and resilience of Northern Ireland Railways' management team in maintaining services despite terrorism and hooliganism. While concluding that there was scope for improving efficiency and reducing costs it was impressed by the company's forward-looking investment programme and its lack of complacency in facing competition. The commission identified a number of areas where improvement was possible, in particular:

(i) a reduction in the management structure, and changes in reporting relationships and board composition

(ii) abandonment of passenger sectorisation

(iii) strengthening of the company's human resource management.

The commission has also recommended improvements in such areas as the setting and monitoring of financial and operating objectives, working practices and a simplified payment system, personnel and training administration, corporate planning, investment appraisal, maintenance of rolling stock and infrastructure, research into matching supply and demand, and the company's relationship with its holding company, the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company and with the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland).

That Department, in consultation with Northern Ireland Railways and the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company, will be producing a preliminary response to the Commission's findings within three to four months, in the light of which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will make a statement.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which accountancy bodies have applied under the Companies Act 1989 for recognition as a supervisory body.

Mr. Redwood: The following bodies have applied for recognition:

(i) The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales,
(ii) The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland,
(iii) The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland,
(iv) The Chartered Association of Certified Accountants,
(v) The Association of Authorised Public Accountants.

The Chartered Association of Certified Accountants has also applied for recognition of its professional qualification. As I announced in my reply of 30 October, at column 435, the Institutes of Chartered Accountants have already applied for recognition of their professional qualification.

I have placed a copy of each application in the Library of the House. Certain material submitted in confidence has been excluded from the copy placed in the Library.

Product Liability

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries have been received from the European Commission concerning the implementation by the United Kingdom of the 1985 EC product liability directive; what replies have been sent by his Department; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 December 1990]: The EC Commission issued a reasoned opinion in July 1990 under article 169 of the EC treaty, setting out its concern over the way in which the United Kingdom has implemented the EC directive on product liability in part I of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. A full reply was sent in October 1990, and it is now for the Commission to decide whether to pursue the matter further.

By mutual agreement, the Commission and all member states treat proceedings under article 169 as confidential. I am therefore afraid that I am unable to make available the details of the correspondence.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State and Industry if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of his Department since 1 January 1985, giving the date and purpose of each survey.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 December 1990]: The information is as follows:

Opinion survey	Date held
Public attitudes to biotechnology	August 1987
Awareness of single European internal market	April 1988
Attitudes to the labelling of fur products	May 1988
Attitudes of adults to the use of fireworks by themselves and children	October 1990

Internal Market Council

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Internal Market Council on 13 December.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 December 1990]: I attended the Internal Market Council on 13 December, the last of the Italian presidency. A number of important measures were agreed.

In particular, a common position was reached on the computer software directive, which will require member states to give copyright protection to computer programs. The compromise reached on reverse engineering (the term used to describe the process of finding out how a program works) provides that such processes will be allowed subject to certain conditions. This should make it possible to connect all components of a computer system, including those of different manufacturers, so that they can work together.

In addition, there was political agreement on the weapons directive, which deals with the acquisition and possession of weapons (a formal adoption of a common position is likely before the end of the year); and agreement to a regulation to discourage the diversion of precursor chemicals to illicit manufacture of drugs.

Common positions were also reached on two amendments to the directive on certain dangerous substances, restricting the marketing and use of cadmium (10th amendment) and ugilec 121 and 141 and DBBT (11th amendment). Subject only to a technical German reserve, a common position was also reached on an amendment to the machinery directive in order to include mobile lifting machinery.

A total of six single market measures were agreed without further discussion, including a common position on the directive relating to spray suppression devices, and on the regulation allowing the use of TIR and ATA carnets as transit documents. The decision setting out mandatory testing and certification provisions within further Community technical harmonisation directives was also finally adopted.

There was further discussion without agreement on a number of issues, notably the directive on the irradiation of food. No real progress was made, but the subject will be discussed again at future Councils.

Internal Market Ministers discussed the Commission's report, required under article 8b of the treaty of Rome, on the progress made towards the completion of the internal market.

The Commission also made a report on the importance for the single market of trans-European networks in telecommunications, transport, energy and training. A full debate is expected at February's Internal Market Council.

Client Accounts

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will discuss with the Securities and Investments Board the maintenance of registers of client accounts and approved auditors for client accounts.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1990]: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board. However, I understand that self-regulating organisations and recognised professional bodies hold details of the auditors of authorised firms and of firms authorised to hold client money.

Levitt Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any companies in the Levitt Group were at any time holders of licences to trade in securities issued by this Department, or had applied for such licences.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1990]: No.

Cammell Laird

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure that the treatment of Cammell Laird shipyard conforms with the principles of the European Community's directive on aid to shipbuilding to ensure that the progress towards the full achievement of the internal market is carried out on an equal and equitable basis in respect of all Community yards.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 December 1990]: The general question of Cammell Laird's ineligibility for intervention fund was explored in depth with the European Commission by the former Minister of State for Industry in October. The hon. Member for Birkenhead sought and received, on 5 December 1990, at column 297, at commitment that a further approach would be made to the Commission in respect of specific orders for which Cammell Laird was competing and for which the company requested intervention fund support. The particular order for which the company was then bidding has subsequently been placed with another yard which offered a different specification. We await a suitable further order on which to base a further approach to the Commission.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in Amber Valley in (a) 1979, (b) 1981, (c) 1987 and (d) 1990.

Mr. Jackson: The most recent estimates of employment in parliamentary constituencies are from the September 1987 census of employment; the earliest are for September 1981. There were 29,300 employees in employment in the Amber Valley constituency in September 1981 and 34,300 in September 1987. The figures exclude the self-employed and members of HM forces.

European Year for Elderly People

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what decision was taken by the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting in Brussels on 26 November in respect of a European Year for Elderly People.

Mr. Forth: The 26 November meeting of the Social Affairs Council agreed the proposal for a European Year of Elderly People.

Overseas Workers

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those currently in the United Kingdom as overseas domestic workers have work permits; and from which year of issue these date.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 18 December 1990]: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits for overseas workers have been issued in each year since 1970.

Mr. Jackson: The number of work permit approvals for each year since 1970 are as follows:

	Main scheme	Training and work experience	Total
1970	66,470	7,549	74,019
1971	56,031	6,399	62,430
1972	46,987	5,712	52,699

The extension in Northern Ireland covers land in the administrative counties of Antrim, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry and Tyrone.

Maps showing the revised areas are being prepared and a copy will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Salmonella

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any cases of invasive salmonella have been found in consignments of imported eggs in the current year.

Mr. Gummer: The public health laboratory service is investigating consignments of imported eggs for the presence of invasive salmonella. In arrivals up to 8 November, they have identified invasive salmonella in 24 consignments of Dutch eggs, in two consignments of Belgian eggs and in one consignment each from France and Germany. One consignment of eggs from the Irish Republic was also found to be contaminated.

The number of isolations of invasive salmonella in eggs from our major overseas supplier (the Netherlands) is particularly worrying and I have taken this up with the Dutch Minister of Agriculture as a matter of urgency.

The Dutch veterinary services already have a monitoring and control programme for salmonella enteritidis in the breeding sector and those breeding flocks found to be infected are destroyed. In addition, a code of practice will be introduced shortly in the egg laying sector which will place particular emphasis on all aspects of hygiene. Following my approach, the Dutch Ministry will be discussing with egg producers additional safeguards that will offer protection to consumers both within the Netherlands and in the United Kingdom. It is too early to say precisely what form these controls will take, but they will be developed in close co-operation with my chief veterinary officer.

Coffee (Decaffeination)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to introduce labelling of coffee for the different processes of decaffeination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The labelling of coffee and coffee products is harmonised throughout the European Community; the harmonised rules provide for the use of the description "decaffeinated" but not for differentiation between different processes. Any additional provisions would have to be discussed at EC level; I have no plans to initiate any such discussions.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the safety of the different processes used to decaffeinate coffee; whether any of his committees have considered the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Water, carbon dioxide, and dichloromethane are used to decaffeinate coffee. Both carbon dioxide and dichloromethane were considered by the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee in its review of solvents in 1978 and found to be suitable for use in food although further data on dichloromethane was requested.

These have subsequently been provided and both the Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food and the Environment (COT) and the European Commission's Scientific Committee for Food have approved its use providing residues do not exceed 5mg/kg.

Organic Produce

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of organic produce consumed in the United Kingdom is imported; and at what cost.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available.

Agricultural Chemicals

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the average time for processing applications for registration of agricultural chemicals in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: This information cannot be obtained, except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for registration of agricultural chemicals were made, and how many registrations were granted, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is set out below in respect of application for new agricultural pesticides (active ingredients) submitted to the Ministry for approval by the six Departments responsible. Applications for which the Health and Safety Executive is primarily responsible (that is non-agricultural pesticides) are not included.

	1987	1988	1989	[1]1990
(a) Received	23	12	15	7
(b) Approved (Fully Provisionally)	11	2	3	6
(c) Only approved for experimental use	—	3	2	1
(d) Rejected Withdrawn	1	—	1	5

Cattle (Records)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will outline the details required to be recorded by farmers in herd books as a result of the Bovine Animals (Identification, Marking and Breeding Records) Order 1990; whether he intends to introduce a new pro forma herd book; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has given to farmers about recording details of cattle as outlined in the Bovine Animals (Identification, Marking and Breeding Records) Order 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information has been given to his regional offices about the recording details for cattle as outlined in the Bovine Animals (Identification, Marking and Breeding Records) Order 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information which has to be recorded by farmers is set out in the schedule to the Bovine Animals (Identification, Marking and Breeding Records) Order 1990. Farmers will have to make their own arrangements to record this information.

Information about the requirements of the order was issued by press notice, a letter to trade organisations, including the farming unions, and through an animal health circular to all the Agriculture Departments' veterinary and technical staff.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has issued to local authorities concerning the implementation of the new regulations on food irradiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Consideration of applications to preserve food by irradiation will be a matter for a national licensing authority. Where a licence to operate is granted, the authority will liaise as necessary with other enforcement agencies to ensure compliance with statutory provisions.

Spanish Abattoirs

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take urgent action to lay before the European Commission evidence sent to him by the RSPCA relating to breaches of the humane slaughter regulations in Spanish abattoirs.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission is already considering this matter and is aware of the evidence presented by the RSPCA, and the British Government will be raising it directly with the Commission at the earliest opportunity.

WALES

NHS Corporate Management Programme

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish an updated version of the national health service corporate management programme.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: "National Health Service Wales: Agenda for Action", the successor document to the corporate management programme, is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many speech therapists per head of population are employed by (a) each health authority in Wales and (b) each county council in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The provision of speech therapy services is the responsibility of district health authorities under the National Health Service Act 1977. Information on speech therapists employed by health authorities in Wales which relates to whole-time equivalents in post at 30 September 1990, is given in the following table. No information is held centrally on the numbers (if any) of speech therapists employed directly by county councils.

Authority	WTE per 100,000 population
Ciwyd	7·2
Dyfed	6·4
Gwent	3·6
Gwynedd	4·7
Mid Glamorgan	3·4
Pembrokeshire	4·4
Powys	7·2
South Glamorgan	8·1
West Glamorgan	4·9

Inspectorate for Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated annual cost of Her Majesty's inspectorate for education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is estimated that the cost of Her Majesty's inspectorate for education in Wales for 1990-91 will be £3·39 million.

Pupils (GCSE Results)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of pupils sitting GCSE core and foundation subjects achieved grades of C and above in the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There is no examination by GCSE of the statutory requirements of the national curriculum at present. The national curriculum requirements for core subjects are scheduled to be examined for the first time at the end of key stage 4 in 1994, except for Welsh which will be first examined in schools where Welsh is currently taught in 1995, with foundation subjects following progressively between 1995 and 1997.

What follows are the percentages of pupils achieving a grade C or above in Welsh Joint Education Committee GCSE examinations in summer 1990.

	Percentage Grade A-C[1]
English	43·7
Mathematics	37·6
Welsh as a 1st language	47·1
Physics	47·4
Chemistry	48·6
Biology	42·2
Geography	44·3
History	45·9
French	55·8
Music	63·3
Art and Design	46·4
PE	37·8

[1] Includes an element of pupils aged 14 and 16. WJEC examinations account for approximately 95 per cent. of all GCSE entries in Wales. Technology is not examined as a single subject by the WJEC at present.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bathing beaches in Wales have achieved a blue flag award; and what steps he is taking to ensure more beaches meet the same standards of cleanliness.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: One beach in Wales, Cefn Sidan, was awarded a blue flag in 1990. A major programme of investment is under way to bring bathing waters designated under EC directive 76/160/EEC up to standard and to implement the Government's decisions on levels of treatment to be given to discharges to coastal and estuarial waters. The cost in the United Kingdom of these programmes is estimated at £3·5 billion. It will be for local authorities or, in some cases, the owner, to capitalise on this and bring their beaches up to the requisite standards.

Vacant Accommodation

Mr. Gwilyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers and percentage of vacant council-owned accommodation for each of the district councils in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the following table:

Local Authority vacant dwellings at 1 April 1990

Welsh Districts	Number	[1] Number as a percentage of local authority stock

Homelessness

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of those legally defined as homeless for each district council in Wales; and if he will estimate the proportion of each who do not have a roof over their heads.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Data for the third quarter of 1990 on the number of cases accepted as homeless, or threatened with homelessness within 28 days, as described in part 3, section 58 of the Housing Act 1985, are given in the following table. The proportion of these cases who do not have a roof over their head is nil.

Home Ownership

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to extend home ownership in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In Wales, our right-to-buy policy has been extremely successful. In the last 10 years, well over 80,000 local authority dwellings have been sold and owner occupation has increased from 62 per cent. in 1981 to 71 per cent. earlier this year—higher than any other part of the United Kingdom.

Building on this, last year we introduced an experimental flexi-ownership scheme which enables tenants of the Development Board for Rural Wales to buy their homes at a weekly outlay broadly the same as their existing rent. I am very encouraged by the success of the scheme: 17 per cent. of eligible tenants have expressed an interest and 14 sales have already been completed which, at 2 per cent. of the eligible stock, is a little more than the initial take-up of right-to-buy. Within a few months, when current applications have been processed, I expect completed sales to total about 5 per cent. of the eligible stock. We are considering whether this scheme can be extended to other public sector tenants in Wales.

The Department will continue to work with local authorities to foster low-cost home ownership schemes, encouraging them especially to work with housing associations and the private sector to provide homes affordable by first time buyers. Housing for Wales is also making a significant contribution to low-cost home ownership particularly through its shared ownership programme, targeted mainly at rural areas.

Seals

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many coastal sites have seal populations; and how many have been lost in the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We are advised by the Natural Environment Research Council that the last comprehensive survey of grey seals along the Welsh coastline was undertaken in 1974. This showed that although there was a concentration of seals on and around the islands of Ramsey and Skomer, Pembrokeshire generally seals were spread widely along beaches and in small caves along the Welsh coastline. It is therefore not possible to define specific "coastal sites" in Wales or to say how many there were or whether any have been lost in the last five years. The study concentrated on grey seals, as the common seal does not occur in the coastal waters around Wales.

However, based on a long series of data from the island of Skomer and on local observations along the Welsh mainland coast, the sea mammals research unit of NERC and the Nature Conservancy Council believe that the grey seal population in Wales has remained stable during the last five years.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the waiting list numbers for each hospital in Wales in respect of (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients in each of the specialties for which his Department has established a treatment centre in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information for 31 March 1990 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Advertising

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the publicity campaigns that have been undertaken by his Department in each of the last three years and the sums spent on each in respect of (a) press advertising, (b) television advertising and (c) other forms of advertising and promotion on each.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not readily available, and I will reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of verdicts of suicide which have been returned on prisoners who died by their own hand during 1990 in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: As at 17 December, a total of 48 inmates had died at their own hands during 1990. A verdict of suicide was returned on 19 of these inmates; inquests on 19 of the deaths are yet to be held.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales died by their own hand in each year from 1980 until the latest available date; and of these, what number were (a) remand prisoners, (b) female prisoners, and (c) prisoners under the age of 21 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is set out in the table

Deaths at the inmate's own hand at HM Prison Service establishments 1 January 1980—17 December 1990

[3] Inquests have yet to be held on 19 deaths which occurred in 1990.
[4] To 17 December.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is offered within the prison service to staff on how to deal with suicidal inmates; and if he has any plans to increase the amount of training offered.

Mrs. Rumbold (holding answer 18 December 1990): All new entrant prison officers are given training in suicide awareness and interpersonal skills as part of their initial course. In-service training is organised on the cascade principle. Selected members of staff attend a three-day course at the prison service college, at which they are trained in suicide prevention and also learn how to deliver this training within their own establishments. Courses are arranged locally as and when governors are able to release staff to attend them. I welcome the increasing participation by the Samaritans in suicide prevention courses both at the prison service college and at a number of individual establishments.

We shall be considering the need to accelerate and develop the in-service training programme in the light of the report on suicide and self-injury by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, which has been published today.

Mr. Lorrain Osman

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the case of Mr. Lorrain Osman.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. Osman is the subject of an extradition request made by the Government of Hong Kong, in respect of various charges there, involving conspiracy to defraud, conspiracy to steal, bribery, theft and fraudulent false accounting. In support of their request, the Hong Kong Government submitted over 30,000 pages of evidence.

Mr. Osman was arrested on 6 December 1985 and remanded in custody. On 1 June 1987, after a hearing lasting 66 working days, he was committed to custody by the chief metropolitan stipendiary magistrate for surrender. Since then, he has appealed four times by applications for writs of habeas corpus. He cannot be surrendered while appeal proceedings are pending. His fourth application was dismissed by the Divisional Court on 12 December 1990 as an abuse of process and contravention of statute. The judgment said that no blame could be attached to the Hong Kong Government for the lapse of time while Mr. Osman has been pursuing his appeals, and expressed the hope that the question of return could be determined without delay. Mr. Osman may apply, within 14 days of the judgment, for leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

Acacia Place, NW8 (Armed Raid)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the departmental designation of those officials not members of the Metropolitan police, who attended an armed raid on No. 3 Acacia place, NW8 recently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that only officers of the Metropolitan police were involved in the search at 3 Acacia place on 27 November.

Third Safe Country Policy

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the operation of the third safe country policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Police Powers of Entry

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend police powers of entry into private premises to conduct searches if it is believed that explosives or ammunition are being kept there.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend is discussing with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and with the director of the Health and Safety Commission new draft regulations under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 in order to improve controls over the storage of explosives on private premises. We are considering the designation of a small number of police officers as inspectors under the 1974 Act. They will attract, under section 20 of the Act, those powers which are necessary for them to fulfil their duties under the proposed Control of Explosives Regulations.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he intends to provide about the use of irradiated food in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Regulations made under the Food Safety Act 1990 are intended to allow a person buying food or being served with food to decide whether or not to consume irradiated foods. This poses difficulties in a prison environment. We have therefore no plans for the central procurement of irradiated foods for use in prisons. For minor items purchased locally, prisons are being advised to avoid irradiated foods.

Prisons

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached any conclusions on the review of the prison estate following his consultation with staff, trade unions and boards of visitors.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 17 July at columns 468-70, following a review of the prison estate, a number of proposals involving either changes in the role of prison service establishments or in some cases, closure. I have carefully considered the comments and suggestions received since then, including a number from right hon. and hon. Members. I have now concluded that most of the proposals which emerged from the review should be implemented, although further thought should be given to some.

I have decided that two young offender institutions—Campfield House and Lowdham Grange—should close by the end of March 1991. In addition, HMYOI Eastwood Park and Her Majesty's prison Northeye should close in 1992-93. I have also decided that the closure of Her Majesty's prison Lancaster should be brought forward to coincide with the opening of a neighbouring new establishment, HMYOI Lancaster Farms, currently scheduled for 1992-93.

I have decided that the changes of role proposed in the consultation exercise should also go ahead, with the exception of the proposals relating to Send, Brockhill, Oxford, Risley and Thorp Arch. The changes of role proposed for the first four were designed to meet problems which the latest population figures suggest may not now arise. It is only sensible therefore that these establishments should continue for the present with their existing tasks. The intention now is to close Brockhill when it is no longer needed for its present role, the timing being phased with the opening of Brinsford and Blakenhurst which are new establishments both currently scheduled to be available in the latter part of 1991-92.

I have also concluded that the building programme offers an alternative and quicker means of offering relief to the young prisoner population in Leeds and Hull than the conversion of Thorp Arch would have done. It is therefore intended to locate these prisoners in the new establishment at Moorland during the second half of next year. Moorland will offer the most modern accommodation, and the opportunity for the prison service to develop an improved regime for those on remand.

Revised projections for the prison population to 1998 were published in Home Office statistical bulletin 33/90, a copy of which is in the Library. These projections were substantially lower than those previously published. Prison service management will therefore be conducting a further review of the estate in the light of this trend in the prison population and the resources available.

Election Expenses

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress on the review of the system of controls on candidates' expenses at elections announced on 21 June 1989, Official Report, columns 131-33.

Mrs. Rumbold: The second and final stage of the review has now been set in hand. A consultative group is being set up under Home Office chairmanship and representatives of the main political parties and of local authority associations are being invited to participate. The review will include Scotland and Northern Ireland. The group's terms of reference are to consider whether the current provisions for controlling expenditure on election campaigning at parliamentary, European parliamentary and local government elections are both appropriate and effective and, where appropriate, to make recommendations for change.

Broadcasting (Terrorist Organisations)

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking under the Broadcasting Act 1990 to continue the restrictions on the broadcasting of direct statements by representatives of terrorists' organisations connected with Northern Ireland and their supporters.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today issued notices, to take effect from 1 January 1991, to the following broadcasters and broadcasting regulatory bodies.

(i) the independent Television Commission, under section 10 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, in respect of licensees which will be broadcasting from that date:

(ii) th Welsh Fourth Channel Authority, under section 63 of the 1990 Act, which will be a broadcaster from that date; and

(iii) the Radio Authority, under section 94 of the 1990 Act, in respect of licensees which will be broadcasting from that date.

I have also issued amended notices, under section 29 of the Broadcasting Act 1981 (which is continued by the 1990 Act), to:

(i) the ITC, in respect of those ITV companies who will continue as programme contractors until the expiry of their existing contracts at the end of 1992 and also in respect of Channel 4; and

(ii) the Radio Authority, in respect of those independent radio stations which do not opt to become licensees until the expiry of their existing contracts.

Copies of the notices have been placed in the Library.

Public Lavatories (Police Deployment)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the cost of the deployment of four officers between 1 September 1989 and 31 December 1989 at the public lavatories at Highbury crescent, London, N5;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the costs to the police of the arrest, detention, charging and subsequent prosecution of 35 men arrested between 1 September 1989 and 31 December 1989 at the public lavatories at Highbury crescent, London, N5.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Metropolitan police that no additional costs were incurred in the deployment of the four police officers; and that the only identifiable additional cost incurred in the arrest, detention, charging and prosecution of the 35 men arrested was approximately £600 in overtime payments to police officers involved in the court proceedings.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on how many men arrested at the public lavatories between 1 September 1989 and 31 December 1989 at Highbury crescent, London, N5, were tried in (a) the Crown court and (b) the magistrates court; how many were convicted; and what sentences were imposed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, of the 35 men arrested, 15 were tried in the Crown court and the remaining 20 in the magistrates court. Thirty were convicted, with fines ranging from £75 to £150, and some were also bound over to keep the peace.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis indicating the number of years' policing experience the Commissioner requires of police officers who are engaged on surveillance duties in public lavatories.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Metropolitan police that, when police officers are employed on surveillance duties at public lavatories, it is force policy that at least one must have experience of this type of duty.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on how many complaints were received from members of the public between 1 September 1989 and 31 December 1989 concerning activities in the public lavatories at Highbury crescent, London, N5; and how many such complainants gave statements to the police, pursuant to section 9 of the Criminal Justice Act 1987, section 102 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 or regulation 70 of the Magistrates' Courts Rules 1981, regulation 70.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I understand that the Metropolitan police were informed in writing of local concerns about the public lavatories in question.

Road Traffic Law

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing the various recommendations of the road traffic law review on the enforcement of road traffic laws by the police and through the courts other than those covered in the current Road Traffic Bill.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Substantial progress has been made in implementing many of the recommendations of the road traffic law review which concern enforcement by the police and through the courts and which do not require legislation.

The review recommended that chief constables should consider equipping some of their traffic patrol vehicles with video recording equipment. We are aware of 21 forces in England and Wales which use video cars in the enforcement of road traffic law.

The review recommended that more comprehensive information about driver licensing and driver records should be available to officers on patrol. A feasibility study on improved links between the police national computer and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency was completed in March 1990. It is intended to take this forward as part of the development of the police national computer 2 in order to make full information about driver records available to officers on patrol.

The review made a number of recommendations about the use of alternatives to prosecution. In 1989, over three quarters of all motoring offences against which official action was taken were dealt with by written warning, fixed penalty, or under the vehicle defect rectification scheme. Substantial numbers will also have been dealt with by verbal warnings at the roadside, although these are not recorded.

The operation of fixed penalty procedures was comprehensively reviewed in 1988. A copy of the report of this review was placed in the Library on 27 June 1989. The system continues to function well, and its operation is monitored by a Home Office-chaired working group, on which the police and the courts are represented.

The review's recommendations on the vehicle defect rectification scheme and written warnings were pursued through consultation with the traffic committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers. After consulting all forces, the Association of Chief Police Officers was satisfied that the vehicle defect rectification scheme is operating efficiently and consistently. It will be keeping its operation under review.

The Association of Chief Police Officers endorsed the conclusion of the review that warnings should be used whenever possible. However, they did not consider it desirable to pursue the recommendations about standardising the format of warnings, primarily because of the widely varying circumstances in which warnings may be given.

The review made several recommendations about the provision of information about sentencing to the courts. The Home Office is working closely with the Justices' Clerks Society and the Magistrates Association on how sentencing information might best be presented to the courts. We hope that this will assist the courts to make a general comparison of their sentencing practices.

Broadcasting Unit

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role and functions of the broadcasting unit in his Department; what steps are taken to ensure that its activities are non-party political; and what powers it has to prevent or encourage broadcasting in specific cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Officials of the broadcasting department of the Home Office provide information and advice to Ministers on broadcasting policy. They are subject to the normal civil service rules concerning party political activities; and have no powers to prevent or encourage broadcasting in specific cases.

Sexual Offences

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men were (a) convicted and (b) cautioned for the offence of procuring the commission of homosexual acts under section 4 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 and, of those convicted, how many were (i) fined, and what were the 10 highest fines imposed, (ii) were given suspended sentences, and what were the lengths of these suspended sentences in each individual case and (iii) were imprisoned, and what were the lengths of each of these custodial sentences, in each year from 1980 to 1989;

(2) how many men were (a) convicted and (b) cautioned for the offence of persistently soliciting or importuning other men in a public place for immoral purposes under section 32 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 and, in the cases of those convicted, how many were (i) fined, and what were the 10 highest fines imposed, (ii) given suspended custodial sentences, and what were the lengths of these suspended sentences in each case and (iii) imprisoned, and what were the lengths of each of these custodial sentences, in each year from 1980 to 1989.

Mr. John Patten: Information relating to section 4 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967 is given in the table. Data collected centrally under section 32 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 cannot distinguish whether males or females have been solicited or importuned by male offenders.

Number of males cautioned and convicted for offences under section 4 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967

Remand (Juveniles)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the secure establishments that are regularly used by the magistrates courts of south Wales for remanding juveniles and the incidence of their usage.

Mrs. Rumbold: Boys aged 15 to 16 whom the south Wales courts remand to prison custody are held in remand accommodation at Cardiff or Swansea prisons. On Friday 14 December, three were held at Cardiff and one at Swansea.

After-care Accommodation

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding has been allocated to support voluntary after-care accommodation projects provided by housing associations and other bodies; what the revaluation rate for 1991-92 will be; and when the voluntary organisations concerned will be informed of those figures.

Mr. John Patten: A total of £9,179,000 has been allocated to the voluntary after-care grant scheme in 1991-92, a proportion of which will be used to fund accommodation projects provided by housing associations and other bodies. We expect the revaluation factor to be at least 8 per cent. for 1991-92. We are already discussing with a number of the major providers of after-care accommodation their likely provision for 1991-92, and an announcement will be made as early as possible in the new year.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state (a) the planned outturn expenditure, expressed in 1989-90 prices for the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 on payments under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 and the percentage increase or decrease in that figure over the estimated actual outturn expenditure for 1989-90 in 1989-90 prices and over the planned outturn expenditure for 1989-90 in 1989-90 prices, (b) the proportion of that planned outturn expenditure for 1992-93 and for 1993-94 which he has set aside as the upper limit to be made available to be spent on successful applications by training and enterprise councils by way of grants to voluntary organisations, (c) the proportion of that planned outturn expenditure for 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and for 1993-94 which he has set aside as the upper limit to be made available to be spent, on successful applications by local authorities by way of grants to voluntary organisations and (d) the proportion of that planned outturn expenditure for 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and for 1993-94 which he has set aside as the upper limit to be made available to be spent on successful applications by local authorities by way of secondment of staff to, or other external staffing arrangements for, voluntary organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The available information is as follows:

(a) The planned outturn figures for the years 1991-94 and the latest estimate of 1990-91 outturn will appear in the Home Office annual report to be published in February 1991.

(b), (c), (d) The guidelines for section 11 grant require local authorities to include a proportion of applications from voluntary projects. No separate allocation will however be set aside for such applications. The allocation of grant as between local authorities and training and enterprise councils will be made nearer the time when final provision is determined.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements he proposes to make or enter into for processing applications from training and enterprise councils for sums to be paid in 1992-93 and in 1993-94 under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for payment of grants to voluntary organisations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria he proposes to use in determining which applications by training and enterprise councils for payments under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 shall be successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Training and enterprise councils are ineligible to receive grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 (which restricts the payment of grants to local authorities). Applications submitted by TECs for funding of projects with effect from 1 April 1992 under the new ethnic minority grant in parallel with section 11 grant will be considered and processed in accordance with the new arrangements announced by the then Home Secretary in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 18 October, at column 897-98. Copies of the material issued to TECs were placed in the Library. This sets out the criteria by which successful applications will be determined.

DEFENCE

Avimo Ltd.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is seeking reimbursement of any costs incurred in connection with the supply of inaccurate technical data or defective Government-furnished equipment to Avimo Ltd. relating to its contract for production of TOGS equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: It would not be appropriate to comment on this matter until full investigation of the options open to the Department has been concluded.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the outcome of his Department's claim against Avimo Ltd. for liquidated damages in respect of the delayed delivery of TOGS equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following discussions with the company on the Department's claim for liquidated damages, the Department accepted that delays had arisen for reasons outside the company's control, and the claim was withdrawn.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has made any ex gratia payment in respect of technical data or Government-furnished equipment supplied to Avimo Ltd. in connection with its contract for the supply of TOGS equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department has made a payment to Avimo Ltd. arising from additional costs incurred by the company, for reasons outside its control, in performing the contract.

Low Flying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum height at which aircraft are permitted to fly in an east-west direction over Derwent Water.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Aircraft flying in this area of the United Kingdom low flying system must adhere to a minimum separation distance of 250 ft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the reasons for the concentration of the bulk of operational low flying in the Borders tactical training area since August.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The distribution of operational low flying, including that associated with our Gulf commitments, is constrained by the location of major operating bases and ranges, the prevailing weather and the suitability of the various tactical training areas for individual practice sorties. My Department's aim, reflected in the 1988 extension of the Borders tactical training area, remains, however, to distribute such activity as widely as is practicable and all three tactical areas have been made available for Gulf-related training in recent months.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying movements at less than 250 ft were authorised in each of the tactical training areas in each month from January 1988 to December 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of movements authorised for flying below 250 ft within the tactical training areas between January 1988 and December 1989 were as follows:

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what authorisation has been given since 2 August to United States air force units based in the United Kingdom to fly at heights less than 250 ft above ground level in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Agreement was given to a request that a small number of USAF A-10 aircrew based in the United Kingdom, who may be required to deploy to the middle east at short notice, should, very exceptionally, be authorised to undertake a limited amount of low flying training at heights down to 100 ft in the mid-Wales tactical training area in December.

In the event, no such training has taken place to date.

Strobe Lights

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to fit high intensity strobe lights to (a) Tornado GR1s, (b) Tornado F3s, (c) Chinooks, (d) Nimrods, (e) Tucanos and (f) Royal Navy Sea Kings.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Plans already exist to fit high intensity strobe lights to both variants of Tornado, Chinook and Nimrod. The Tucano is already fitted with "bright" strobe lights and there are currently no plans to retrofit these with HISLs. Due to its different mode of helicopter operations, the Navy has no current requirement for these lights. The exception is the Gazelle, used primarily for basic flying training purposes, and operated over land, which is fitted.

Air Accidents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates of publication of all military aircraft accident summaries published this year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is as follows:

Details of MAAS (aircraft type and tail number)	Date of publication in 1990
RAF Sea King—XZ585	12 January
RAF Phantom—XV428	31 January
RAF Phantom—XV437	5 March

United States Defence Department Employees

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of United States nationals employed by the United States Department of Defence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: The total number of United States civilians employed by the United States Department of Defence in the United Kingdom is some 4,500. For the number of United States service personnel, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 30 November 1990 at columns 548-49.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States nationals are employed by the United States Department of Defense at each base or facility operated in support of United States forces in the United Kingdom, giving the local authority for each establishment.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information regarding the employment of United States civilians at individual bases and facilities in the United Kingdom is not held in this form. For the numbers of United States service personnel, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 30 November 1990 at columns 548-49.

Hunting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 27 November, Official Report, column 378, if he will list the dates of renewal for each licence allowing hunting on Ministry of Defence land.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Details of the dates the licences for hunting are renewed on each year are as follows:

	Date
The Hampshire Hunt	1 September
Mr. Gochen's Hounds	1 September
The Chiddingfold, Leconfield and Cowdrey Hounds	1 September
The Windsor Forest Blood Hounds	1 September
The Royal Artillery Hunt	1 August
The South and West Wiltshire Hunt	1 August
The Avondale Hunt	1 August
The Sennybridge Hunt	1 September
The Irfon and Tywi Hunt	1 September
The Brecon Hunt	1 September
The Glyn Celyn Beagles	1 September
The Essex and Suffolk Hunt	1 January
The Cambridgeshire Hunt	No fixed date.[1]
The Bedale Hunt	1 September
The West of Yore Hunt	1 December
The Zetland Hunt	1 September
The Wensleydale Foxhounds	1 September
The Catterick Beagles	1 August
The Border Hunt	31 December
The Tynedale Hunt	31 March

[1] Depends on whether the Hunt wants to use MoD land.

United States Bases

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the NATO-funded military construction projects that will be in construction for United States forces at bases in the United Kingdom in the fiscal years 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 30 November 1990 at column 535.

RAF Quedgely

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 30 November, Official Report, columns 529-30, for what purpose Ministry of Defence police personnel were stationed at RAF Quedgely in 1986 and 1987; and what was the number of personnel on each occasion.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: MOD police officers have been stationed at RAF Quedgely for many years in their normal role, which is the policing and protection of Crown property. The complement in 1986 and 1987 was one inspector, one sergeant and 19 constables.

As the hon. Member will know from the answer which I gave previously, all MOD police officers are required to undergo initial and continuation public order training. In 1986 the opportunity arose to use facilities at RAF Quedgeley and 221 MOD police officers received continuation public order training there in that year, followed by 74 in 1987. This facility is no longer available.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of each category of treaty-limited items were at RAF Greenham Common on the latest reporting date under the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Alan Clark: Fifty-two ground-launched cruise missiles and 12 transporter erector launcher vehicles, including spares, were at Greenham Common on 1 December 1990, the latest reporting date under the INF treaty.

Military Construction Projects

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 30 November, Official Report, columns 535-6, which military construction projects that have not started construction have been approved by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member on 30 November 1990 at columns 535-6.

Nuclear Warhead Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Governments have been in communication with the United Kingdom concerning the recent United Kingdom nuclear warhead tests on 14 November.

Mr. Alan Clark: Apart from the Government of the United States, with whom the United Kingdom exchanges information under the terms of the 1985 United States/United Kingdom agreement for mutual co-operation, no Governments have been in communication with the United Kingdom about the joint United States/United Kingdom underground nuclear test on 14 November 1990.

Civilian Drivers

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have occurred to the conditions of employment of civilian drivers employed by his Department in the last six months.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what provision will be made for the accommodation of civilian drivers employed by his Department whilst they are on detached duty after 30 November;

(2) what provision will be made for the accommodation of civilian drivers employed by his Department whilst they are on detached duty prior to 30 November.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is normal for civilian staff, including drivers, when on detached duty to make their own accommodation arrangements and to claim the appropriate rates of subsistence. On occasions, official accommodation may be made available.

"Options for Change"

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the significant changes to the operational status of British military forces that have resulted from the "Options for Change" study.

Mr. Alan Clark: Work is continuing to refine and cost the broad proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in July. Announcements of force level changes will be made as progress in our planning allows, and we have already announced that 11 Royal Navy vessels have been, or are shortly to be decommissioned and that two RAF stations in Germany are to be closed.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the significant changes to the procurement programme that have resulted from the "Options for Change" study.

Mr. Alan Clark: The continuing work to refine and cost the broad proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in July includes an assessment of our future equipment requirements. During the defence debate on 18 June, I was able to make an early announcement of the decision not to proceed with the order for the eighth batch of Tornado attrition aircraft. Further changes will be announced as progress in our planning allows.

Antares

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any change to the instructions given to submarine commanders since the sinking of the fishing boat Antares.

Mr. Alan Clark: No changes have been made to current operating instructions. However, as the hon. Member is aware, the Royal Navy board of inquiry is conducting an investigation into the circumstances surrounding HMS Trenchant's fouling of trawler gear at the time of the loss of the Antares, and it is possible that this will recommend changes to current instructions.

Submarine Activity

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide information on the times and areas of United States submarine activity to fishing boats in the Clyde.

Mr. Alan Clark: United States Navy submarine movements in the Clyde area are included in the notification scheme introduced on 17 December.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with foreign military authorities regarding the movement of submarines in British coastal waters.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are regular communications between Royal Navy and allied navy authorities regarding such operations in United Kingdom coastal waters. Allied submarine movements in the Clyde area are included in the notification scheme introduced on 17 December.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the exact nature of the information regarding submarine activity he intends to provide to Clyde fishing boats.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on sea areas within the firth of Clyde in which dived submarine operations are planned and the intended times of such operations will be broadcast by the Clyde coastguard every four hours.

Tanks and Armoured Vehicles (Conversion)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been undertaken by his Department to assess the potential for conversion to civilian use of the tanks and armoured combat vehicles that the United Kingdom is committed to permanent withdrawal from military availability under the Paris treaty on conventional force reductions in Europe.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no such potential.

SCOTLAND

The Gulf

21. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the provisions made in Scottish hospitals for the reception of service casualties in the event of the use of the military option in the Gulf.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Plans which provide for the treatment of military casualties in Scottish hospitals in the event of war have been reviewed. If required, beds would be made available in national health service hospitals in Scotland to treat service casualties arising from possible hostilities in the Gulf.

Local Government Finance

22. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for sorting out the financial difficulties of local authorities which have arisen as a result of the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: On the basis of their own estimates of community charge collection levels, local authorities will receive around 99 per cent. of their total budgeted income in relation to both 1989-90 and the current year. We therefore must avoid making too much of their difficulties, especially as aggregate external finance for next year is being increased by 10·4 per cent.

30. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much local government spending has increased or decreased in Scotland since the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On the basis of local authorities' 1990-91 budget estimates, expenditure has increased by 8·94 per cent. since the introduction of the community charge in Scotland in 1 April 1989.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report for each local authority area in Scotland (a) the number of individuals who are liable to pay the personal community charge, (b) the number of people who are paying the personal community charge and (c) the number of people who are exempt from paying the personal community charge, separately distinguishing the numbers by exemption category.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information on the number of people who are paying the personal community charge is not held centrally. The following table gives the figures requested which are available and relates to 1 July 1990. Information held by community charges registration officers on people who are exempt from the personal community charge is not comprehensive, and the figures given are estimates provided by the local authorities.

Numbers on the community charge register: July 1990

2. "Other" includes patients in residential homes, nursing homes or hospitals, members of religious communities, residents in Crown property, persons of no fixed abode, etc.

Scottish Parliament

23. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans for a directly elected Scottish parliament.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No.

24. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review or repeal the poll tax in Scotland.

27. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review or repeal the poll tax.

32. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to review the community charge legislation in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has announced the Government's intention to conduct a careful and fundamental review of the community charge arrangements in Scotland, England and Wales.

Freight

25. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the movement of freight within, and to and from, Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provision made by my right hon. Friend for expenditure on roads and transport is aimed at serving the needs of all types of transport users, including freight hauliers, and at ensuring that Scotland has transport infrastructure and systems which are safe and efficient.

Roads

26. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are currently being taken by his office to assess the implications of the single market for road communications in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Improved communications and transport links are particularly important for the continued success and development of the Scottish economy in relation to the single market. The Government has made clear the role of the M6, M1, M25 widening and the A74 upgrading to Scotland.

To assist future decisions on road investment in Scotland a major trunk and key principal road network review is currently in progress and is due to report early next year.

This will take into account a large number of factors affecting traffic growth in different regions of Scotland including economic development.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out (a) total expenditure, in real terms, on motorways and trunk roads in Scotland for each of the years from 1980-81 to 1989-90, (b) estimated total expenditure on motorways and trunk roads in 1990-91 and (c) planned provision for motorways and trunk roads in each of the years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Financial year	Actual expenditure	Constant 1990-91 prices
1980-81	91	164
1981-82	104	171
1982-83	110	168
1983-84	106	155
1984-85	115	160
1985-86	119	157
1986-87	115	147
1987-88	125	152
1988-89	131	149
1989-90	163	174
[1]1990-91	201	201
[1]1991-92	198	189
[1]1992-93	211	195
[1]1993-94	215	193

[1] Figures have been revalued using GDP deflators.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the reasons for the £9 million reduction planned in expenditure on motorways and trunk roads for 1991-92.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The trunk road programme in Scotland has benefited from a substantial increase in resources in recent, successive expenditure settlements. This has enabled very significant progress to be made in upgrading Scotland's trunk road infrastructure.

For 1991-92 it was necessary to balance the expenditure required to sustain a realistic trunk road programme against the many other important and competing demands on resources within the Scottish block. The small reduction in overall provision for roads for 1991-92 will still allow significant progress to be made on our planned programme of improvements to Scotland's key strategic routes, including the upgrading of the A74 to motorway.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the areas in which the £9 million reduction in expenditure on motorways and trunk roads will be made and the specific road schemes which are likely to be affected.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The programme of new construction and improvements will be the only area affected by the small reduction in trunk road expenditure announced for 1991-92. Some revision of planned start dates for future schemes may be necessary as a result. Final decisions on which schemes might be affected will not be taken until March with the announcement of scheme starts for the year ahead. This enables full account to be taken of the latest information available on the resources required to meet existing ongoing commitments, the consequent balance of funds remaining and the state of readiness and relative priority of schemes within the national programme.

Homelessness

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now take steps to make the code of guidance to the homeless persons legislation mandatory on local authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I do not think that it would be appropriate to take away the discretion of local authorities to take into account the needs and circumstances of particular cases. A mandatory code could not cover the wide range of matters dealt with in the present draft without severely fettering that discretion and reducing authorities' effectiveness.

Fishing

29. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish fishing industry to discuss the industry's prospects for 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister responsible for agriculture and fisheries met the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on Thursday 13 December. A number of issues were discussed in relation to the industry's prospects for 1991.

38. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had recently with representatives of the west coast fishing industry on the state of west coast fishing stocks.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My noble Friend the Minister responsible for Agriculture and Fisheries met the Scottish Fishermen's Federation which represents many west coast fishermen on Thursday 13 December. A number of issues, including the state of west coast fish stocks, were discussed.

Housing Policies

31. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit Corkerhill, Tencharhill, and Moorpark housing areas of Govan constituency to discuss Government housing policies with tenants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Industrial Policy

33. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish Trades Union Congress to design industrial policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Scottish Office Ministers have met representatives of the Scottish Trades Union Congress on several occasions in recent months. My right hon. Friend and I hope to maintain a continuing dialogue with the STUC on matters affecting the Scottish economy and industry.

Regional Selective Assistance

34. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whom he consults before making regional selective assistance available to applicants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Industrial Development Advisory Board is consulted before making any substantial offer of regional selective assistance. Furthermore, and in line with practices agreed between the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Department of Trade and Industry, market advice is sought from the Government Department with the lead interest in the particular sector involved. Other consultations may be undertaken depending on the particular circumstances involved.

Highland Region Schools

35. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to undertake a tour of schools premises within Highland region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to visit Highland region.

Health Board Funding

36. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider his allocation to Scottish health boards for 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As no decision has been taken or announced on allocations to health boards for 1991-92, it would be difficult for me to meet the hon. Gentleman's request.

Steel Industry

37. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of steel plants in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: British Steel has confirmed that, subject to market conditions, it expects there to be a continuing commercial requirement for steelmaking at Ravenscraig and plate-rolling at Dalzell at least until the end of 1994. I welcome British Steel's expressed willingness to co-operate with the Scottish Development Agency's study on the prospects for the steel industry in Scotland and to give careful consideration to any commercial opportunities which the study might identify.

Scottish Development Agency

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total amounts paid to projects in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde by the Scottish Development Agency in the years from 1985-86 to 1989-90 years in (i) cash terms and (ii) as a percentage of total budget.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is set out in the following table:

District	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90

(ii) Percentage of total budget	1·0	2·2	1·6	0·7

Note: The percentage of total budget is based on total expenditure excluding marketing, promotion and running costs. Area expenditure figures also exclude such costs.

Training

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of training places in (i) employment training and (ii) youth training contracted with the Training Agency in each month from January in (a) Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll, (b) Lothian and Borders, (c) Lanarkshire, (d) Highlands and Islands, (e) Grampian and Tayside, (f) Glasgow City, (g) Central and Fife and (h) Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested about the number of training places in employment training is not available. The available information about the number of youth training places is set out in the table.

Youth training agreed places

	January 1990	February 1990	March 1990
Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll	8,237	8,237	8,243

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) in the Greater Glasgow health board, on what basis the number of rehabilitation personnel for children with special needs is assessed; when the position was last reviewed; and when it will be reviewed again;

(2) if he will request Greater Glasgow health board to determine the number of rehabilitation staff required to fulfil the needs of children in schools for children with special needs;

(3) if he will make additional funds available to Greater Glasgow health board for rehabilitation staff in schools for children with special needs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Services such as speech therapy, physiotherapy and occupational therapy for children with recorded special educational needs are primarily the responsibility of education authorities, although in practice, they are generally supplied by the health board.

Greater Glasgow health board is currently reviewing its provision of rehabilitation personnel for children with special needs as part of its community health services strategy and expects to issue this for consultation shortly. I have drawn the concerns of the hon. Member to the board's attention. Health boards are given an annual revenue allocation and it is for the boards to decide how best to apportion these resources. A decision on the 1991-92 allocations has not yet been made.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden of 7 December, Official Report, column 237, what are the proposed starting dates for the remaining Seafield units.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that at this time no dates have been set by the Greater Glasgow health board for the start of the remaining planned Seafield units.

West Linton Primary School

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that the capital consent to Borders regional council for 1991-92 will be sufficient to replace the primary school at West Linton so as to cater for the private housing developments in the village.

Mr. Lang: Distribution of consents to incur capital expenditure in 1991-92 to local authorities will be announced in February 1991. It will be for Borders regional council to determine what school building work may be required at West Linton in the light of its knowledge of local needs and of the resources available to it.

Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) men and (b) women whose death was caused by lung cancer for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the annual report for 1989 of the Registrar General for Scotland (table C1.1, pp 42-43, ICD9[1] 162); a copy of the report is available in the Library of the House. This year, for the first time, the Registrar General also sent a copy to each Scottish right hon. and hon. Member for reference.

Registers (Sale of Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will describe the pricing structures surrounding (a) the sale of information from the electoral register and (b) the community charges register, and give the reasons why it was decided to use different pricing structures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Certain persons may obtain a limited number of copies of the electoral register free of charge. Additional copies for such persons, or copies for a returning officer or a local authority are provided at a charge of 25p per thousand entries. In all other cases the fee is £2·50 per thousand entries. There is no provision for the sale of the community charge register.

Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was or is the planned expenditure for Scotland at 1990-91 prices for training in 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94;

(2) expressed in 1990-91 prices, what was or will be the combined budget for expenditure in Scotland by the Scottish Development Agency, Highlands and Islands Development Board and Training Agency or successor bodies in 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(3) what the expenditure in 1988-89 on the Scottish Development Agency, Highlands and Islands Development Board and Training Agency or their successor bodies would be in 1991-92, expressed in 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Expenditure on training by the Training Agency in Scotland has not been planned separately prior to 1991-92. The only indentifiable figures relating to training by the Training Agency in Scotland for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are figures in the supply estimates for the training programmes, Scotland vote (class XV, vote 4) which covers the contribution made by the Industry Department for Scotland towards the expenditure borne on class VI, vote 1 of the Department of Employment in relation to training activities in Scotland.

This provision is intended to reflect that part of the cost of the Department of Employment's training programme for Scotland which can be separately identified. However, it is not a reliable guide to actual expenditure by the Training Agency in relation to its activities in Scotland. Subject to this caveat, the figures are as follows:

These figures are not directly comparable with provision for expenditure on training by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise in connection with training activity in 1991-92 and future years. 1991-92 is the first year for which it will be possible to identify an accurate figure for central Government expenditure in connection with training activity in Scotland.

The component parts of the grant-in-aid for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for 1991-92 which will be devoted to such activity are still under discussion with them; and will be reflected in due course in the grant-in-aid tables in the supply estimates for the regional and general industrial supports, Scotland vote (class XV, vote 3). However, it is possible now to identify that proportion of the public expenditure provision for 1991-92 which has been transferred to the Scotland programme from the employment programme. That figure is £239·5 million at 1990-91 prices. Comparable figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94 will be published, on a cash basis, in due course in the departmental report.

The difficulties referred to above have implications for the validity of any comparisons which combine figures for the Training Agency with those relating to the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board. Subject to this important proviso, the information sought is set out in the table:

	£ million
1988-89	447·8
1989-90	515·8
1990-91	494·9
1991-92	463·7

Notes:

1. Resources for training include provision for expenditure on the Technical and Vocational Education initiative, which will be the responsibility of the Industry Department for Scotland from 1 April 1991.
2. The figures for 1990-91 are for planned expenditure rather than for forecast expenditure because it would be particularly misleading to equate estimated outturn on Class XV, Vote 4 with forecasts of actual expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Expenditure by the Scottish Office in 1989-90 on newspaper advertising, television and radio, printed and other material and information videos was £1,022,000, £1,059,000, £995,000 and £96,000.

The corresponding figures for 1988-89 were £378,000, £617,000, £887,000 and £46,000.

Prior to 1988-89 an analysis of expenditure was not maintained in the form requested. Total expenditure on information publicity for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was £677,000, £857,000 and £1,094,000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average value, in the last 12-month period for which records are available, of passport benefits for income support recipients (a) including housing benefit and community charge benefit and (b) excluding these two benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: Comprehensive information is not available on the basis requested; and, in particular, relevant information about community charge benefit is not yet available.

In any event, it would not be meaningful to try to average the value of all the passport benefits across all income support recipients. Some of the passport benefits are not relevant to everyone who is receiving income support. For example, free welfare milk and free school meals are available only where there are children in the family; and for some other passport benefits the value depends on the extent to which people need to make use of them, such as, exemption from NHS charges and payments from the social fund.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the deductions of income support for other purposes at 31 August as stated in his answer of 4 December.

Miss Widdecombe: Further to my answer of 4 December, the deductions from income support for other purposes at 31 August cover the following direct payments:

Rent arrears and service charges for fuel or water paid with, or as part of, rent	78,917
Mortgage interest	7,420
Water charges	45,155
Residential care homes, nursing homes or hostels	3,179

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answers of 27 November, Official Report, columns 365-6, regarding income support, what further specifics concerning circumstances he requires for these comparisons to be made, assuming there had been no change in the previous supplementary benefit scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Even if the value of benefit in respect of housing costs were excluded, information would still be required to enable an assessment to be made of the additional requirements each beneficiary may have received under the supplementary benefit scheme—for example, the exact age of the claimants and any partner or children, their state of health and whether this meant they had to follow any special diet, needed extra baths or wore out their clothing unusually quickly, what laundry facilities were available and the size and condition of the accommodation. This list is by no means exhaustive but serves to illustrate the complexities of the old scheme and the intrusive questioning necessary to determine entitlement.

Further information would also be required to determine whether each individual satisfied the conditions for receipt of a range of other social security benefits, and, if so, at what level.

Furthermore, it is increasingly unrealistic to attempt to make such comparisons on the assumption that, if it were still operating, there would have been no changes whatsoever to the supplementary benefit scheme over the period since 1988. Such an approach would produce results which would be misleading at best and, at worst, almost meaningless.

Child Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1991-92 of (a) increasing one-parent benefit in line with inflation, and (b) paying the full £1 per week increase in child benefit to each of the child dependency increases for which there is to be a claw-back and for guardian allowance and child's special allowance.

Mr. Jack: The information is as follows:

(a) £14 million;
(b) £5 million.

Note: The figures are net of savings from income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Child Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost per year if there was a full child benefit disregard for recipients of income support.

Mr. Jack: The net cost of disregarding child benefit in the assessment of income support (assuming that the principle of alignment were to be maintained with housing benefit and community charge benefit) is estimated to be in excess of £1 billion a year.

Deductions at Source

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Greenock and Port Glasgow in receipt of income support are having deductions made at source in order to pay (a) poll tax arrears and (b) crisis loan repayments.

Miss Widdecombe: The information at 30 November is as follows:

	Deductions for Community Charge Arrears	Crisis loan Repayments
Greenock	486	263
Port Glasgow	241	164

Carers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what types of carers will be helped by the proposed introduction of a carers premium;

(2) what types of carers have been helped by the introduction of the carers premium; and how many have been helped.

Miss Widdecombe: The carer premium was introduced from 1 October this year for people claiming income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit who are getting invalid care allowance. It also goes to people who have claimed that allowance since October but could not be paid because they had another, more valuable, benefit. We estimate that 30,000 people will be helped in this way. We have recently announced that from October next year, the premium will continue for up to eight weeks after the caring role ceases. Regulations will be brought before the House in due course.

Residential Homes

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many elderly persons have been placed in a local authority home in cases where supplementary income support for board and lodging payments to elderly people of limited or no means in private or voluntary residential and nursing homes is inadequate or insufficient to pay the costs in the last year for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not collected centrally.

Pensions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been, and what is currently being done to make additional financial provision for pensioners whose sole income is provided by their state pension.

Miss Widdecombe: Any pensioner whose income and capital falls below a prescribed level can claim income-related benefits. If a pensioner is in receipt of the maximum amount of basic state retirement pension only (with no additions) they would be entitled to income support and therefore would also be entitled to receive maximum housing benefit and maximum community charge benefit.

From October 1989, we directed an extra £200 million a year to elderly and disabled pensioners through improvements in the premium structure common to income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit. This was in addition to the normal uprating for that year. From April 1991, we will also be increasing the ordinary pensioner premium (pensioners aged 60 to 74) over and above the normal uprating at a cost of around £80 million. This will directly benefit about 400,000 pensioners on income support and well over 1·5 million others who receive housing benefit and community charge benefit.

21. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of uprating the basic pension by £13 for a single person and £20 for a couple.

Miss Widdecombe: Pursuant to the reply given by my hon. Friend the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 19 November at column 56, I regret that some of the information given was incorrect.

The rise in the NI contributions paid by an employee on average earnings would be approximately £2·78 per week, not £2·93 per week.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has carried out into the household costs of motor neurone disease.

Mr. Scott: This Department has not carried out any specific research into the household costs of motor neurone disease.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has received any representations concerning the additional costs associated with motor neurone disease.

Mr. Scott: This Department has not received any representations specifically concerning the additional costs associated with motor neurone disease.

Transitional Protection

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants are still in receipt of the transitional protection following the benefit changes in 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: Shortly after last April's uprating of benefits, about 110,000 income support claimants were receiving transitional additions. In November this year, about 52,000 people were receiving housing benefit transitional payments.

Blind People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people whose main disabling condition is listed as blindness or disease of the eye receive attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many registered blind people are entitled to the severe disability premium out of the number who live alone.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to change the guidance notes for doctors in the attendance allowance board's handbook, in particular those clauses related to (a) longstanding blindness and attendance allowance and (b) gradual blindness and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: A handbook containing guidance notes for the delegated medical practitioners who deal with attendance allowance is produced, by the Attendance Allowance Board, which is independent of the Department of Social Security. I understand that the board is revising this handbook and will look at its guidance on blindness as part of that process.

Personal Pension Schemes

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated amount payable to personal pension schemes in 1991-92, distinguishing between the contracted-out rebate, the 2 per cent. inducement and tax relief on the rebate.

Miss Widdecombe: On the assumption that, by the end of 1990-91, the number of people with personal pensions is 4·5 million, the Government Actuary estimates that the revenue forgone in 1991-92 will be £1,730 million for the contracted-out rebate, £600 million for the 2 per cent. incentive, and £200 million for the tax relief on the rebate.

Visual Impairment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receive attendance allowance solely on the basis of visual impairment.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

One-parent Benefit

Miss Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much will be saved from freezing one-parent benefit in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: Pursuant to the reply given by my hon. Friend the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 20 November at column 108, I regret that some information has been found to be incorrect. The correct answer is that not uprating one-parent benefit in 1991-92 saves £23 million on the benefit itself but results in increased spending on income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit. The net saving is £14 million.

Benefits (Kilmarnock)

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Kilmarnock in receipt of social security benefits are having deductions made at source for (a) poll tax arrears and (b) loan repayments.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Income support is the only social security benefit from which deductions for community charge arrears may be made. The number of deductions at 30 November 1990 was 536.

The number of social fund loans being recovered from income support customers in Kilmarnock at 30 November 1990 was 1,648.

HEALTH

Pay and Prices

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the price indices, disaggregated to the maximum extent possible to match the economic category analysis of the public expenditure White Paper, which underlay his Department's estimates of pay and price inflation over the period 1974-75 to 1988-89; together with the economic category weights for each year used in the calculation of pay and prices indices for (a) national health service total, (b) hospital and community health service current, (c) family practitioner service current and (d) personal social services current and capital.

Mr. Dorrell: The following tables give the information which is readily available, disaggregated as far as possible to match the economic categories in the public expenditure White Paper.

Notes:

1. Figures underlying the indices and percentages for 1978-79 and later years are not directly comparable with figures for 1977-78 and earlier years because of the inclusion, since 1978-79 of direct credits and of differences in the composition of different parts of the programme.
2. The indices shown above cover over 90 per cent. of NHS expenditure. Specific indices are not available for Central Health and Miscellaneous Services and Departmental Administration.
3. Expenditure on HCHS current and FPS current falls into economic categories (i) and (ii) in the annual Public Expenditure White Paper; expenditure on NHS capital falls into economic category (vii).

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of beds available within Mid Surrey and East Surrey area health authorities for 1980, 1985 and 1990 or latest available date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table.

Average number of beds available daily.

District Health Authority	1980	1985	1989-90
Mid Surrey	2,835	2,275	1,872
East Surrey	2,666	2,267	1,539

A large proportion of this reduction in beds is a result of the successful implementation of the policy of care in the community for the mentally ill and handicapped. Over the period 1979 to 1989-90, there has been an increase in the numbers of patients treated of 18·5 per cent. in mid-Surrey and 26·1 per cent. in east Surrey.

Nurses

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of (a) holidays and (b) sickness days taken by nurses in each of the years 1961, 1971, 1981 and 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available centrally.

Since 1974, the annual leave entitlement for qualified nurses has been five weeks a year. Unqualified nursing staff receive four weeks, with an additional two days after five years' service and a further three days after 10 years' service. Staff are also entitled to 10 paid public holidays. Prior to 1974, entitlements varied for different groups of staff and for some groups included public holidays.

Village Hospitals (Closure)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many village hospitals have been closed in the Mid-Surrey and East Surrey area health authorities between 1979 and 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have not been any small hospital (less than 50 beds) closures between 1979 and 1989 in Mid Surrey district health authority. East Surrey closed three small hospitals, Bletchingley hospital (43 beds), Horley hospital (15 beds) and the old East Surrey hospital (48 beds). Services are being concentrated at the new East Surrey district general hospital.

HIV-AIDS

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to account for the movement of people into metropolitan centres providing specialist treatment for HIV and AIDS in determining the charging system between health authorities for treatment of out-of-area patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Earmarked funds to the national health service for the treatment and care of people with HIV infection and AIDS are distributed on the basis of the numbers of live AIDS cases reported in each region. This method of allocation is to continue for 1991-92.

We are exploring what changes will be needed in arrangements for funding the provision of services for AIDS treatment and care post 1991-92 to take account of the new purchaser-provider functions of health authorities.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many specialist AIDS facilities there are in London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The majority of acute hospitals in the London area now have experience in looking after people with HIV infection and AIDS. Of these, Westminster (St. Stephen's), St. Mary's, the Middlesex, the Central Middlesex and the Royal Free hospitals have found the need to establish designated beds for the treatment of HIV because of high prevalence in their catchment areas.

In addition, a range of voluntary sector bodies provide community care for people with HIV and AIDS and have been given substantial Government financial support to assist them in this.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has made in relation to the practice of insurance companies of sometimes not revealing the result of an HIV test to an applicant for life insurance who has undergone a test at the company's request.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have discussed with the Association of British Insurers the procedures which insurers follow when asking an applicant for life insurance to have an HIV test. The Association of British Insurers has also discussed this issue with the Terrence Higgins Trust. The Association of British Insurers produced guidance in 1988 which laid out recommended procedures for counselling, and provided advice on the disclosure of a positive result to an applicant for life insurance. I understand from the Association of British Insurers that it intends to revise its guidance to include advice on the disclosure of negative results.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Government have reconsidered their response to the recommendation in the seventh report from the Social Services Committee in Session 1988-89 that issuers should not ask proposers for life insurance whether they have ever had a test for HIV; and what steps the Government have taken since the publication of the report to consider with the insurance industry the effects of asking proposers whether they have ever had a test for HIV.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 11 December at column 363.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Government intend to initiate a voluntary or compulsory process of contact tracing for HIV.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to institute a mandatory procedure for contact tracing for HIV. It has always been the policy of staff of genito-urinary medicine clinics to counsel people who are HIV-positive of the desirability of informing their partners. Handling must be at the discretion of the staff of the clinics; the wishes of the person concerned are, and must remain, paramount.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds are paid to the voluntary sector for HIV-AIDS work, other than direct grants from his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department makes substantial sums available to both health and local authorities for services for people affected by AIDS-HIV. Authorities are able to use these funds to make grants to voluntary groups in the AIDS field. However this is a matter for local discretion and the Department does not hold central records of such grants made.

Life Insurance (High-risk Groups)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has made to insurance companies in the United Kingdom in connection with references in the supplementary questionnaire for life insurance applications to high-risk groups established by health authorities; and what consideration he has given, in relation to public education on the risk of HIV infection, about the relative merits of reference to high-risk groups and to high-risk behaviour.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We occasionally hear of letters from insurers which imply, or are taken to imply, that the Government require insurers to send supplementary lifestyle questionnaires to applicants for life insurance. This is not the case, and we bring cases that come to our attention to the Association of British Insurers so that it can take the matter up with the company involved. We no longer refer to risk groups, as it is a person's behaviour which determines whether they are at risk of contracting HIV, not their membership of a particular group in society. Our public education campaign messages reflect this.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure the publication of statistics regarding the operation of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990; and what statistics will be published.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under section 7 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act, the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority is required to send to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State an annual report on the authority's activities. It will be for the authority itself to decide whether and how to publish any statistics.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that the public are consulted prior to licences being issued under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Responsibility for licensing arrangements will rest with the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority which was established under section 5 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act. The Act does not require the authority to consult the public prior to the issue of licences.

Abortion

205. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that doctors aborting babies of 24 weeks' gestation and more attempt to preserve the baby's life.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The decision as to the most suitable method of treatment in any particular case is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned in the light of all the relevant clinical issues and circumstances of the case.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the complication rate associated with mothers undergoing an abortion in the NHS as compared with those undergoing abortion in a private clinic.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The available information is in the following table:—

Complications of legal abortions to residents and non residents 1989 (England and Wales)

	All Gestations
	NHS Rates per 1,000 abortions		Non-NHS Rates per 1,000 abortions
Reported Complication Total	544	7·68	91	0·80
Sepsis	35	0·49	2	0·02
Haemorrhage	211	2·98	27	0·24
Perforation	120	1·69	43	0·38
Other	178	2·51	19	0·17

This information is derived from the notification forms submitted to the chief medical officer. The Department has sponsored a long-term prospective study by the Royal College of General Practitioners and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists into this matter. Some results were published in 1985 in the Journal of the Royal College of General Practitioners, vol. 35, pages 175-180, appendix III, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has conducted of the reasons for the rise in the abortion rate from 1969 to 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No studies on this specific issue have been funded by the Department.

RU 486 Abortion Pill

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what studies his Department has conducted or is aware of concerning the effect on the mental health of the mother of the RU 486 abortion pill;

(2) in what percentage of cases the use of the RU 486 abortion pill caused abortion without recourse to any further methods of abortion;

(3) if he will list known short-term side effects on the mother of the RU 486 abortion pill;

(4) in what percentage of cases the use of the RU 486 abortion pill is supplemented by the use of (a) prostaglandins, (b) surgical methods and (c) both of these;

(5) what information he has on the effects on the unborn child of the RU 486 abortion pill in those cases where abortion does not occur;

(6) if he will list the known long-term side-effects on the mother of the RU 486 abortion pill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that the manufacturer of RU 486 has applied for a product licence under the Medicines Act. Section 118 of that Act precludes the disclosure of any information relating to a produce licence application. However, studies in the use of RU 486 are well documented in the British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, June 1990, Vol. 97, pp 480-486 and in The New England Journal of Medicine, March 8 1990, Vol. 322, No. 10 pp 645-648, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Day Surgery Facilities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to issue any guidelines about the proportion of new day surgery facilities which may be used for (a) private and (b) national health service patients.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for local decision.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the review of services for mentally disordered offenders.

Mr. Dorrell: A review of health and social services for mentally disordered offenders is being undertaken jointly by the Department and the Home Office. We have appointed a steering committee, whose terms of reference are:

"To plan, co-ordinate and direct a review of the Health and social services provided in England by the NHS, Special Hospitals Service Authority, and local authorities for mentally disordered offenders (and others requiring similar services without having come before the courts), with a view to determining whether changes are needed in the current level, pattern, or operation of services and identifying ways of promoting such changes, having regard to:

the development of new management arrangements in the NHS and the proposals for the development of community care;

the implications for NHS forensic psychiatry of action to follow up the report of the Home Office Efficiency Scrutiny on the Prison Medical Service; any relevant recommendations of the inquiry into the Strangeways prison disturbances (the Woolf Inquiry and other prison-related inquiries); and including consideration of:

present arrangements for funding services and service developments, and their possible improvement; relevant research studies.

To produce regular reports to the Department of Health and the Home Office on the progress of the review and its findings, together with its recommendations.

The review will be essentially concerned with assessing how services should be developed within the framework of existing legislation. It is not intended as a review of the law. However, the steering committee may propose amendments to the law if it considers that they would materially further the longer-term objectives of the review."

The following have been appointed to membership of the steering committee:

Dr. J. L. Reed (Senior Principal Medical Officer, Department of Health) (Chairman)
Mr. R. Baxter (Grade 5, Home Office) (Joint Secretary)
Professor R. S. Bluglass (Professor of Forensic Psychiatry, University of Birmingham)
Miss E. A. Crowther (Director of Social Services, City of London)
Mr. A. J. Davies (Director of Operations, Special Hospitals Service Authority)
Mr. A. H. Fender (Director of Strategic Planning, Wessex Regional Health Authority)
Professor J. Gunn (Department of Forensic Psychiatry, Institute of Psychiatry)
Mr. P. R. Herring (Director of Finance, St. Helens and Knowsley Hospital Trust)
Mr. I. Jewesbury (Grade 5, Department of Health) (Joint Secretary)
Mr. L. R. Joyce (Unit General Manager, Mental Illness Care Group, Newcastle Health Authority)
Dr. J. O'Grady (Consultant Psychiatrist, Newcastle Health Authority)
Mr. E. Packer (Clerk to Wimbledon Magistrates)
Mr. J. Parry (Senior Nurse Manager, Regional Forensic Services, Mersey Regional Health Authority)
Mr. G. W. Smith (Chief Probation Officer, Inner London Probation Service)
Mr. J. G. Smith (Assistant Chief Inspector, Social Services Inspectorate)
Mr. J. Tait (Principal Nursing Officer, Department of Health)
Dr. Pamela M. Taylor (Director of Medical Services, Special Hospitals Service Authority)
Dr. Rosemary Wool (Director, Prison Medical Service)

Discussions are in progress with the police and prison services about how those interests might be represented.

The committee will begin its work early in the new year. The review is due to be completed by mid-1992.

Disabled People

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will next be reporting under section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: I have today laid before the House the report required by section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. This report draws together the major initiatives taken by the Government during 1990 to improve services for people suffering from mental illness and mental handicap.

During 1990, the Government have authorised extra health and social service expenditure of £154 million over three years on services for people with a mental illness.

1. The new mental illness specific grant will support revenue expenditure of £90 million by social service departments.

2. The capital loans fund will provide £50 million to allow health authorities to provide modern facilities to replace long-stay psychiatric hospitals.

3. The Government has authorised £10 million of capital expenditure by local authorities in 1991-92 to develop facilities for the mentally ill.

4. The homeless mentally ill initiative will provide capital expenditure of £4 million to tackle the problem of homeless mentally ill people in London.

In addition to these extra resources, health authorities will be required from April 1991 to have instituted a care programme approach for people being treated in the community. This will ensure that the needs of each patient are assessed and that effective arrangements are made to ensure that those needs are met.

The Government have also announced a review of services for mentally disordered offenders. I am today announcing the membership of a steering committee whose task will be to review provision for mentally disordered offenders to ensure that they receive care and treatment in hospitals designed to meet their needs, rather than finding their way by default into the criminal justice system.

This is a record of progress which demonstrates the Government's commitment to provide high-quality locally based services, which meet the needs of people who suffer from mental illness and mental handicap. I expect to make a statement about the further development of services for people with a mental handicap early in 1991.

Clinical Audit

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to extend the benefits of clinical audit in the national health service beyond the medical and nursing professions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We welcome efforts by all health care professions to look systematically at the quality and effectiveness of their work. The Department is working with the professional bodies of the clinical psychology, occupational therapy, physiotherapy and speech therapy professions on the development of clinical audit in these fields. Last month, we established an initial research study which will start by examining the feasibility of multidisciplinary audit across these areas. This will report early next year, and will be followed up by further development work. I have no doubt that clinical audit will enable these vital professions to improve the service they give to patients still further, just as it will in medicine and nursing.

Macfarlane Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the source of the funding of the £42 million additional payment through the Macfarlane Trusts; and whether this will be met by a fresh allocation to his departmental budget.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The payment will be made from class XIII, vote 3, as have previous payments to the Macfarlane Trusts and subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for this vote will be increased accordingly.

GPs (Reimbursements)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give an immediate reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside concerning general practitioners' reimbursements.

Mr. Dorrell: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State replied on 14 December.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners have had their reimbursements stopped in Liverpool in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We wrote to the chairman of Liverpool family health services authority on 14 December asking her to supply the hon. Member directly with this information about rent and rates reimbursements.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that health authorities and local authorities are enabled to respond quickly to the community care needs of people with motor neurone disease.

Mr. Dorrell: In November 1988, the Department issued guidance to health and local authorities which drew attention to the particular needs of people with progressive neurological conditions including motor neurone disease. The provisions of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and the associated policy guidance are designed to ensure collaboration between authorities in drawing up community care plans and in assessing needs for community care on an individual basis.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has carried out into the incidence of motor neurone disease (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other developed countries;

(2) how much his Department spends annually on research into the causes of motor neurone disease;

(3) what research his Department has carried out or commissioned into the causes of motor neurone disease.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has not carried out or commissioned research into the causes or the incidence of motor neurone disease. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's estimate of the number of people who have motor neurone disease.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on the prevalence of motor neurone disease is not collected centrally.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what criteria appointments were made to the board of the London ambulance service; for how long their appointments will last; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The board of the London ambulance service was appointed by South West Thames regional health authority, which has overall responsibility for the London ambulance service. The five board members were chosen for the contributions they could make to the various activities of the LAS. Four were nominated by the Thames regional health authorities, and one member was the chairman of the former ambulance service panel. Each appointment is for two years.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are permissible for ambulance authorities to pay supplemental housing allowances for their chief officers; how many such arrangements have been approved by him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities have discretion to determine local conditions of service for senior national health service managers, including chief ambulance officers, subject to any overriding national agreement or direction. There is no applicable central agreement providing for housing allowances, nor have Ministers been asked to approve any special arrangements.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the Hertfordshire ambulance service on its practice of charging hospice residents for use of non-emergency services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that Hertfordshire ambulance service is not charging national health service patients for transportation to and from hospices.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings he or officials of his Department have held with the chair and chief officer of the London ambulance service.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Health met the chairman of the London ambulance service on his appointment, and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health met the chief executive of the LAS in October to discuss general issues. Additionally, the Department's ambulance adviser has regular, informal meetings with the chief executive of the LAS.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given to ambulance services concerning the purchase of computer information systems; what compatability exists between systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: General advice on the procurement of information technology has been issued to the national health service.

Decisions on the purchase of equipment for ambulance services rest with local health authority management who would have regard to prevailing local strategies for information systems and value for money.

Hospices

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was paid per year, for each of the last 10 years, by his Department to voluntary hospices, and how much was paid by local health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the level of health authority support for hospices is not available in the form requested, but is currently being collected in respect of recent years. In 1988-89, the Department contributed £1·3 million via health authorities towards the cost of pay awards for hospice nurses, and £400,000 via the charitable trust Help the Hospices, to assist projects in short-term financial difficulty. This year it has made an additional allocation of £8 million to health authorities to enable them to increase the support they give to hospices. It has also made the following direct grants to innovative projects offering a range of services for people with AIDS:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
London Lighthouse:
Capital	1,250	—	—	—

Capital	321	—	—	—
Revenue	29	162	98	—
Commissioning costs	—	94	32	—
Total	1,700	426	430	300

An announcement will be made early in the new year about Government funding for hospices in 1991-92.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will visit the accident and emergency department at King's college hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Management at Camberwell health authority fully accept that the current situation in the accident and emergency department is unacceptable and is addressing the problems as a matter of urgency. A new facility to accommodate patients who cannot immediately be admitted to a hospital bed will be opened shortly.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the maximum time people stay (a) nationally and (b) broken down by area in accident and emergency before being admitted to wards or theatres for urgent treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he intends to give to hospitals about the use of irradiated food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No specific guidance on the use of irradiated food in hospitals is being issued. In common with all other catering establishments health authorities who choose to use irradiated products will be required to so inform consumers under the requirements of the Food Labelling (Amendment) (Irradiated Food) Regulations 1990.

Terminal Illness

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given by his Department concerning the definition of appropriate care for the terminally ill between community care and health care; who has the responsibility of resolving any disagreement between local social services and health authorities on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper, "Caring for People", published in November 1989, makes it clear that health authorities are responsible for the medical and nursing component of care for people who are terminally ill, and that support for hospice care remains with health authorities. Social services authorities have responsibility for arranging the social care and support which may be needed by terminally ill people living in the community. It is for health and local authorities to determine how these responsibilities will be discharged. The Department's policy guidance, "Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond", published in November 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library, emphasises the need for effective collaboration.

Mental Illness

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost per head in each health region of (a) in-patient treatments of mental illness, (b) out-patient and day care treatment of mental illness and (c) general practitioner-prescribed prescription costs for treatments of stress, anxiety and depression.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The latest available expenditure data are shown in the table.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Westminster County Court

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General why it is proposed that Westminster county court should be closed in the context of proposed transfer of jurisdiction from the High Court to the county court; and what representations he has received against closure.

The Attorney-General: It has been proposed that Westminster county court be closed on the expiry of the lease on the present premises as no suitable alternative accommodation can be found.

It is intended that the court will be merged with the existing Bloomsbury county court and located at new premises to be known as Bloomsbury and Westminster county court.

The premises presently occupied by Bloomsbury county court will be converted into a trial centre for the London county courts in order to hear the additional heavier cases which will be dealt with by the county courts following the new arrangements for the allocation of business.

Some concern was expressed at the initial proposals by various parties, however, following consultation with the judiciary and members of the local court user committee, no written representations against closure have been received.

County Court Trials

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give details of the county court trial centres which are to be established following the passage of the Courts and Legal Services Act.

The Attorney-General: A total of 74 county court trial centres have already been established in England and Wales, which between them provide continuous trial facilities for over 250 county courts. A further six trial centres are planned. A full list of existing trial centres and those planned will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if county court trial facilities will now be made available at the Royal Courts of Justice.

The Attorney-General: There are no existing plans to use the Royal Courts of Justice for county court trials. Additional facilities for county court trials were established in the court complex at Wood Green in May this year.

Court Rules

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what steps are being taken to approximate the rules of the county court and the High Court.

The Attorney-General: A policy of convergence towards common remedies and procedures has been adopted. This is being given effect through the programme of rule changes which implement the recommendations of the civil justice review.

Jurisdiction

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish a timetable for the transfer of jurisdiction from the High Court to the county court.

The Attorney-General: New arrangements for the allocation of business between the High Court and county courts are to be set out in an order made under section 1 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. Consultation on the content of the order has only recently closed. A formal announcement on the date for implementation will be made once consideration has been given to the various responses.

Courts (Construction)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current cost of the new High Court building in Bradford; what was the brief given to the architect; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The cost at current prices of the new Crown and county court building at Bradford is approximately £20 million. The architect's brief was to provide eight Crown courtrooms and two county courtrooms with supporting facilities. It is expected that the building will be ready for use in the summer of 1992.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General what is the total amount spent on constructing new courts for each of the last 10 years; and if he will give the number of courts and their location for each year.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for Crown, county, combined and High Court centres in England and Wales. Magistrates' courts are the responsibility of the Home Office. Details of new Crown, county, combined and High Court centres completed over the past 10 years and their total costs are given in the table. The schemes listed have produced some 250 courtrooms at an average cost of £1·1 million per courtroom.

Mr. Bill Galbraith

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 211, concerning the investigation by the Gloucestershire constabulary into comments made by Mr. Bill Galbraith, if he will make a further statement on the results of that investigation and any report that has been submitted to him.

The Attorney-General: The Gloucestershire constabulary has not yet supplied the Crown Prosecution Service with a report concerning its investigation, and so I am not in a position to make a further statement.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek injuctions in the High Court to restrain unlawful Sunday trading during the Christmas and new year period.

The Attorney-General: Parliament has made it the duty of local authorities to enforce the legislation relating to Sunday trading, and I do not at present intend to apply for injunctions.

DEFENCE

Airmisses

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates, locations, aircraft involved, altitudes and circumstances of each of the category A airmisses between civil and military aircraft over the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are the following category A airmisses between civil and military aircraft over the United Kingdom in 1988:

Air Defence Ground Environment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to use data from the AN/FPS-117 radars at Bolafjall and Gunnolfsvikurfjall in Iceland as real-time input data to the United Kingdom air defence ground environment.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 30 November, Official Report, column 536, what information he has received from the United States authorities about why the proposed construction for water storage at Menwith Hill was excluded from the information provided to him for his answer to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 6 February, Official Report, column 603.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications of a comprehensive test ban treaty for his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 127 of the statement on the Defence Estimates 1990.

The Gulf

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is being sent out to the Gulf to entertain the troops.

Mr. Alan Clark: Sir Harry Secombe has recently visited the Gulf and Paul Daniels will visit before Christmas. In addition, Combined Services Entertainment arranged a very successful light entertainment show early this month, and further similar shows are planned.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to deploy Gurkhas in the Gulf.

Mr. Alan Clark: A few individual Gurkhas are currently serving in the Gulf. In addition, a Gurkha transport squadron will deploy to the Gulf as part of the reinforcements announced by my right hon. Friend on 22 November.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to place no money restrictions upon the movement or operation of military forces in the Gulf which might in any way jeopardise the safety of personnel.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are committed to ending Iraq's aggression, and will make whatever contribution is appropriate to secure freedom and justice for Kuwait. We shall ensure that the armed forces deployed to the Gulf are provided with the means necessary to do the job that we ask of them.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that departmental properties and establishments reap the maximum financial and environmental benefits from combined heat and power schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence is investigating the viability of operating combined heat and power schemes on a number of specific sites.

Recycled Materials and Renewable Energy

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on promoting the use of recycled materials and renewable energies where relevant to his Department's activities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government's policy on the use of recycled materials and renewable energy is set out in the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200). The MOD is about to bring into use a further range of recycled stationery. We aim to send for recycling non-hazardous waste which can be beneficially recycled without disproportionate cost.

We have a long-standing record on the pursuit of energy efficiency and we monitor developments in the field of renewable energy technology. We are studying sites in the United Kingdom which may have potential for wind powered electricity generation.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has recently received from The Sunday Times concerning the status of the Iraqi nuclear programme; when the information was passed to his Department; and what steps he has taken to evaluate the information received.

Mr. Alan Clark: We were aware of information contained in The Sunday Times article before it was published.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses concerning the capacity of the Al-Qaim uranium processing factory in Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: Al-Qaim is a plant to manufacture fertilisers from phosphates mined in the vicinity. It is possible to extract minute quantities of uranium ore which is present in the phosphates as impurities, but we have no knowledge of quantities obtained.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses concerning the activities of scientists from the Qaqaa explosives factory in Iraq in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other member states of the NATO alliance.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have no specific information on the activities of Iraqi scientists from the Qaqaa explosives factory in the United Kingdom or other NATO countries. Scientists from all over the world are free to attend courses and conferences in this and other countries, and many do so.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he possesses concerning the role of factory 10 near Samarra in Iraq in nuclear materials processing.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have no significant information on the role of Factory 10 near Samarra.

Permeameters

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there is any military use in terms of equipment monitoring and testing for permeameters.

Mr. Alan Clark: Permeameters have numerous uses, both civil and military.

Radio Masts, Sennybridge

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has changed his plans to site naval radar/radio masts on His Majesty's land on the Sennybridge range in Brecon and Radnor.

Mr. Alan Clark: A requirement for new defence communication facilities is under consideration, but no decisions on locations have yet been taken. We expect to make a decision in the coming year.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects a decision to be announced on the siting of naval radar/radio masts for submarine communications on the Sennybridge ranges in Brecon and Radnor.

Mr. Alan Clark: A requirement for new defence communication facilities is under consideration, but no decisions on locations have yet been taken. We expect to make a decision in the coming year.

WALES

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated budget for each of the training enterprise and councils in Wales for (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92; how many people in each training and enterprise council are likely to be trained under (i) youth training and (ii) employment training in 1990-91; what are the comparable figures for the last full year; and what assumptions are made about the number of places to be provided in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Welsh Economy

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (i) the gross domestic product in Wales and (ii) the income per head in Wales, as percentages of the United Kingdom average in the latest available year.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1988, the total gross domestic product per head for Wales was estimated to be 84·0 per cent. of the United Kingdom average (excluding the continental shelf region). These 1988 figures are provisional and revised set, together with provisional figures for 1989, will be published in the November 1990 issue of Economic Trends (No. 445) on 28 December 1990, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Wales' total personal income per head in 1988 was provisionally estimated to be 83·9 per cent. of the United Kingdom average while household income per head in that year was provisionally estimated to be 84·6 per cent. of the national figure.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has now achieved his waiting list objectives specified in pages 160 and 161 of the Welsh Office Public Expenditure Commentary for orthopaedics at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar, ophthalmics at Ysbyty Gwynedd and Bangor, and hernias and varicose veins at Bridgend general hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Figures for waiting lists for hernia and varicose vein treatment at Bridgend general hospital are not separately available. At the other hospitals for which information is requested only the waiting times target relating to the out-patient list for trauma and orthopaedic surgery at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar has thus far been achieved.

Roads

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the major road schemes specified to start in 1990-91 in table 35 of the Welsh Office commentary on public expenditure in Wales 1990-91 to 1992-93 have now commenced.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Work on A55 Rhuallt Hill scheme started in May. The contract for A4060 Pentrebach-Dowlais (Phase 2) was let on the 19 December and work will start in January.

Inward Investment

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list inward investment projects during 1990, specifying the capital investment involved and the number of new jobs created directly.

Mr. David Hunt: Between 1 January 1990 and 30 November 1990, Wales secured 129 inward investment projects involving £484 million of capital investment, promising 7,800 new jobs and safeguarding 7,300 existing jobs. A list of the companies concerned has been placed in the Library of the House though for reasons of commercial confidentiality individual details of investment and jobs are not disclosed.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the additional funding his Department has made to each of the regionally funded renal units in Wales during the current financial year, for the prescribing costs for the drug Erythropoietin; and if he will separately distinguish the number of patients currently receiving such treatment at each unit together with the number of patients refused such treatment because of budgetary constraints on the prescribing consultant.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the number of patients receiving Erythropoietin is not held centrally. During the current financial year additional funds of £75,000 were made available to each of West Glamorgan and Clwyd health authorities to assist with the prescribing of Erythropoietin at the main renal units within those authorities.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the estimated number of patients who would benefit from erythropoietin.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The use of EPO for individual patients is a matter of clinical judgment at the time. No specific representations have been received about the aggregate number of patients who might benefit from its use. Managing health authorities of main renal dialysis units receive central revenue support which includes the cost of drugs at estimated levels of need.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received, and intends to acquire, information from district health authorities on the extent to which the funding provided for the 1991-92 financial year will meet the needs of all patients who fulfil the criteria for benefiting from erythropoietin.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Following the dedesignation of regional services from 1991-92 it will be for district health authorities to determine the resources which should be made available for the prescription of drugs, including erythropoietin.

New Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his forecast of spend on local authority new build for 1989-90 was achieved.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In 1989-90 local authorities spent £24·031 million on new build schemes. In addition, they chose to transfer capital resources of over £17 million to housing associations, for projects which will provide additional housing units.

Treatment Centres Initiative

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the benefits to patients that could be achieved if the money budgeted for the treatment centres initiative in Wales were to be redirected to increase the rate of treatment of patients in the same specialties at appropriate hospitals throughout Wales, using existing facilities.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Within the United Kingdom, treatment centres are unique to Wales. The purpose of this initiative is to offer to those throughout Wales who have been waiting four months or more the choice of earlier treatment for key disabling conditions. The centre at Rhydlafar has been operating for year. It is too early to establish firm referral patterns.

Once all the centres have completed their first year's operations, it is intended to undertake a wider evaluation of the treatment centre initiative. Initial indications are that the centres are proving to be an effective alternative method of delivering speedier health care for Welsh patients.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what programmes have been developed by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales as that authority's contribution to tackling the problem of alcohol misuse in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Health Promotion Authority for Wales's national "substance misuse" programme includes action targeted at alcohol misuse in the Principality, in partnership with voluntary and local agencies, eg. health education publications, components of the authority's mobile life education centre units, and support for Drinkwise Day.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his replies of 4 December, Official Report, column 74, in regard to alcohol misuse, if he will make it his policy to concentrate the available finances on the provision of local services.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Yes.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has met the chairman of chief executive of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales to discuss the work undertaken in the past, and to be undertaken in the future, by that authority in respect of developing positive approaches to alcohol and discouraging people from misuse of alcohol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Although my right hon. Friend has met both the chairman and chief executive of the authority, he did not discuss programme planning on that occasion. However, his predecessor had several meetings with the authority leading up to the launch of their "Health for All" in Wales strategy document in January 1990. That strategy includes the goal of reducing substantially the misuse of alcohol in the Principality and a series of detailed targets for specific improvements for various age ranges of the population. Action to achieve the strategy's goals and targets will be taken by the authority and a range of other organisations in partnership. The authority will publish a firm three-year action programme in the spring.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the funds available to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales have been allocated (a) directly or (b) indirectly to work relating to alcohol misuse in each year since the establishment of that authority; and what proportion he intends should be devoted to such purposes in 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The following proportions of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales' exchequer budget have been directly allocated to alcohol misuse work:

1987-88—not available.
1988-89—4 per cent.
1989-90—6·5 per cent.
1990-91—1·3 per cent.

Figures are not available for work indirectly relating to alcohol misuse—for example, elements of the heartbeat Wales and cancer programmes. My right hon. Friend had not yet decided the detail of the authority's budget for 1991-92.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales wht level of service, according to what criteria he intends shall be achieved in each county of Wales as a result of the finances his Department is to make available in respect of alcohol abuse.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is for local and health authorities to determine the level of service necessary to combat alcohol misuse in their areas. Central funding will be used to support such local strategies.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what resources he has made available to local authorities in Wales to enable them to tackle breaches of the law by large commercial organisations;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to offer additional resources to local authorities in Wales to enable them to tackle breaches of the legislation regarding Sunday trading by major retail organisations;

(3) what guidance he or his Department has offered to local authorities in Wales on their responsibilities in regard to the enforcement of the legislation which regulates Sunday trading;

(4) what assessment he has made of the impact in Wales of large stores and multiple-outlet retail firms opening on Sunday in contravention of the law during December.

Mr. David Hunt: Enforcement of the law is a matter for local authorities. It is for them to decide how to discharge their duties under the Shops Act 1950.

The provisional local authority revenue settlement for 1991-92 allows for total standard spending of £2,433 million—some 8 per cent. above authorities' 1990-91 budgets. I would expect authorities to be able to meet any additional costs arising from Sundary trading enforcement from within that total.

Homelessness

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what new and additional finance he is making available to help (a) local authorities and (b) voluntary organisations to tackle the problem of homelessness in Wales generally and in Cardiff in particular;

(2) what new initiatives he is taking to tackle the problem of homelessness in Wales in general and Cardiff in particular.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Local authorities will soon be invited to bid against a capital reserve amounting to around £2·9 million for 1991-92. Cardiff will certainly wish to respond. The reserve is designed to complement authorities' own efforts in dealing with cases of homelessness, within the context of the approach to partnership with the housing association sector which is developing strongly in Wales. This is underpinned by our plans to increase the total housing association stock by over a third by 1993-94. The Department's close working contract with voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness will continue. Revenue funding for them has been increased by over 16 per cent. to £460,000 for 1991-2. For districts experiencing particular pressure this year, we intend to make available a further £2 million at least, in support of operationally effective scheme.

Fishing Industry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of fishermen to discuss their current fishing activities and prospects.

Mr. David Hunt: I met a delegation representing Milford Haven fishing interests on 20 September.

Child Labour

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to assess the extent and seriousness of exploitation of child labour in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None. Any allegations that children are working illegally should be drawn to the attention of the authorities who have responsibility for enforcing the law (including the provisions of local byelaws).

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what fresh initiatives he intends to take to prevent the exploitation of child labour in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Water

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he intends to meet the Director of Water Services to discuss the rise in prices planned by Welsh Water plc;

(2) whether he intends to meet the Director of Water Services to discuss the requirements being placed on Welsh Water plc in respect of the investment needed in Wales on water supply, sewerage and water quality in rivers and on beaches;

(3) whether he intends to meet the Director of Water Services to discuss the expenditure by Welsh Water plc on the purchase of shares in South Wales electricity board.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be meeting the Director General of Water Services in the new year to discuss a number of matters relevant to their responsibilities.

Sprint Programme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to publicise the European Community Sprint programme along small and medium-sized businesses in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The European Community's Sprint programme is featured in a leaflet included in a Welsh Office business service information pack. These are widely distributed to small and medium-sized businesses throughout Wales through various awareness events and also by my officials in their day to day contact with industry.

Through its involvement with Sprint, the Welsh Development Agency has also promoted the programme to industry.

Llyn Mawr Site, Swansea

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decision he has made on the future of the Llyn Mawr site in Swansea.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has already written to the right hon. Gentleman to say that he has deferred implementing the direction to West Glamorgan county council to sell the site at Llwynmawr road, Swansea by up to 36 months.

Heat Treatment Works, Abercumboi

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many direct representations he has received in connection with the application by Coal Products Ltd. to build a mild heat treatment works at Abercumboi; and if he will list them.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is not possible to obtain the information in the time available, but I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Housing Revenue Account Subsidy

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his initial housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1991-92 for Wales have been made today. They cover the assumptions that the Government will make about rents and management and maintenance and other rules governing the calculation of each authority's subsidy entitlement. I am placing copies of the determinations in the Library.

For rent guidelines, the proposals for an average increase of 2 per cent. above the allowance for inflation are confirmed. This means an average increase of £1·88 and a range of increases from £1·41 to £2·50 per week for individual authorities over the guideline rents which applied this year.

The proposals for management and maintenance expenditure are similarly confirmed. These introduce a system which targets allowances in a way which better reflects the condition of each authority's council stock. This will benefit authorities with the poorest stock while no authority will have a lower allowance per dwelling, in cash terms, than in the current year. Across Wales overall, the average increase in the level of allowances will maintain them at this year's level in real terms.

It is for each council to determine its own rent and how much to spend on the management and maintenance of its stock.

On leasing, subject to some refinement of the rules, the proposals on which we consulted for the Principality covering the amounts of leasing which would attract subsidy within the housing revenue account are also confirmed.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for, or on behalf of his Department since 1 January 1985, giving the date and purpose of each survey.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 17 December 1990]: The information is given in the table.

Attitudes and awareness of environmental issues in a range of companies

In addition, surveys of local authority housing tenant opinion have been undertaken from time to time, notably in the context of the eight priority estate projects in Wales. The Welsh inter-censal survey 1986 included a question designed to test opinion on house repairs. Housing for Wales completed a survey report on the housing aspirations of young people in rural Wales earlier this year.

Treatment Centres Initiative

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the success or failure of the treatment centres initiative in Wales to date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 19 December 1990]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him earlier today.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for 1990-91 and 1991-92 the share in percentage terms of income represented by (i) revenue support grant, (ii) the poll tax and (iii) the business rate for (a) the country as a whole and (b) Stoke on Trent.

Mr. Key: The information requested for 1990-91 is as follows:

Percentage of income received from	England per cent.	Area of receiving authority of Stoke-on-Trent per cent.
Revenue support grant	29·1	20·6
Receipts from non-domestic rate pool	32·1	36·9
Special grants/safety net adjustment to revenue support grant	0·6	4·1
Budgeted income from community charges (post capping)	38·3	38·4
Of which:
Community charge benefit	6·0	4·7
Transitional relief grant	1·0	0·8

The percentages for 1991-92 will not be known until all authorities have set their community charges for that year.

Stoke-on-Trent

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will accept the invitation of the leader of Stoke-on-Trent city council to discuss the current lack of any inner-city status for Stoke-on-Trent.

Mr. Key: We will be responding to Councillor Smith'sinvitation shortly.

Special Needs Housing

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the numbers of housing associations, voluntary organisations and other projects which exist to provide accommodation for (a) the single homeless, (b) the mentally ill and (c) those leaving penal institutions or ex-offenders;

(2) if he will give details of the additional funding he has secured to further develop voluntary after-care accommodation provided by housing associations;

(3) what topping-up funding is available to voluntary organisations and housing associations providing special needs accommodation in 1991-92 to the homeless.

Mr. Yeo: Accommodation for people with special needs is to be provided under a number of Government initiatives in 1991-92 including:

3,000 bedspaces funded through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme.

60 short-term bedspaces in the Department of Health's homeless mentally ill programme.

An allocation by the Home Office of £9,179,000 to the voluntary after-care grant scheme.

Further funding by the Department of Social Security of the Resettlement Agency's scheme for replacing resettlement units and the funding of a number of short-term direct access hostels in London for people sleeping rough.

Topping up is provided from a variety of sources, particularly local authorities and health and social services authorities. In addition, the Department of Health will be funding the running costs of the 60 bedspaces referred to above and the Home Office will be providing topping up funds direct to about 130 organisations.

We do not hold an up-to-date or comprehensive list of projects providing accommodation for people with special needs. But I have arranged for the Housing Corporation to write to the hon. Member to see if they can assist her from the information they hold on schemes run by registered housing associations.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the expenditure by his Department on energy efficiency measures since 1983.

Mr. Heseltine: Information on the expenditure of my Department on energy efficiency measures prior to 1989-90 is not available. Expenditure on energy efficiency measures for 1989-90 is estimated to have totalled £120,000.

Homelessness

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what incentives he will give local authorities to bring empty council stock back into use and to work in partnership with housing associations and voluntary organisations seeking to provide accommodation for the homeless.

Mr. Yeo: We have made a special allocation of £300 million over this year and next to local authorities and housing associations in London and the south-east to provide housing for homeless families, in addition to the resources available under the housing investment programme system. A substantial proportion of the special allocation will be used to bring empty property in both sectors back into use. In addition, a further £96 million will be spent over this year and the next two years; mainly through local authorities, in providing hostel and long-term accommodation for single homeless people in central London; I very much hope that all London boroughs will co-operate positively in making these schemes work, as some have already done.

Community Charge

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report, for each local authority area in England (a) the number of individuals who are liable to pay the personal community charge, (b) the number of people who are paying the personal community charge and (c) the number of people who are exempt from paying the personal community charge, separately distinguishing the numbers of exemption category.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for the available information, supplied by local authorities, to be placed in the Library of the House.

The figures given for the total number of exemptions from the personal community charge include

(i) Community charges registration officers' estimates of the numbers exempt because they are in detention, living in short stay accommodation, or persons without fixed abodes. Figures for those categories are known to be underestimated because CCROs are not obliged to keep records of those exempt.

(ii) CCRO's estimates of the numbers excempt because they are contributors to a collective community charge.

Separate information has not been given where there are fewer than 20 persons in a category of exemption or where the majority of authorities reported fewer than 20 persons in a category of exemption.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts have been budgeted by the London Docklands development corporation for meeting the terms of the memorandum of agreement with the London borough of Newham in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Key: I will write to the Hon. Member.

Mobility Standard

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many units of housing association new build are (a) mobility standard and (b) wheelchair standard for the each year for the last five years; and of those how many units are for sheltered housing for elderly people for both (1) mobility and (2) wheelchair standard;

(2) if he will list, for each year for the last five years, how many units of wheelchair housing of housing association new build have (a) one, (b) two and (c) three bedrooms, excluding those within sheltered housing schemes for elderly people.

Mr. Yeo: The available information on completions of newly built specialised dwellings for 1985 to 1989 is published in table 6.7 "Housing and Construction Statistics 1979-1989: Great Britain" and, for the first half of 1990, in table 1.5 of the June quarter 1990 (Part I) edition of the same title. Wheelchair and mobility standard dwellings for the elderly are not separately identified, nor does the Department collect information about the number of specialised dwellings by number of bedrooms.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many housing association schemes have been audited since the new requirement to build to mobility standard was introduced; and of these how many met the requirement to be of mobility standard;

(2) how many housing association schemes, which were package deal schemes, have been audited since the new requirement to build to mobility standard was introduced; and of these how many met the requirement to be of mobility standard.

Mr. Yeo: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to respond to my hon. Friend direct.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on promoting the use of recycled materials and renewable energies where relevant to his Department's activities.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's policies for the use of recycled materials and renewable energies are set out in the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200).

In order to ensure that these policies are put into practice in Government, my Department's property holdings organisation is preparing an environmental action guide, which will include advice on the use of recycled material and on energy efficiency.

My Department's policy is to use recycled materials where practicable and reasonably economic to do so.

For instance, my Department uses recycled paper for all of its ministerial correspondence. Other products made from recycled material that are in general use within my Department include manilla paper and file covers, brown paper bags, paper towels, buff envelopes and toilet tissue. We are also conducting trials in the use of recycled paper for high speed photocopying and we are considering a trial of recycled paper for use with computer printers.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing association new build came from package deal programmes in each year for the last five years.

Mr. Yeo: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to respond to my hon. Friend direct.

New Parliamentary Building

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the contractor for the new parliamentary building phase I will achieve completion by 22 December 1990; and when he expects hon. Members will be able to occupy the new offices.

Mr. Yeo: Although the contractor has made considerable progress over the past months, he has not been able to complete the contract and hand over the building to Property Holdings. It seems likely that handover will now be achieved in late February or early March. A programme is being developed to fit out the building and to arrange for a phased programme of moves for Members, their staff and the Departments of the House. It is still expected that full occupation will be achieved at the end of the summer adjournment 1991.

Freeholds

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses are exempt from the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1967 which permit leaseholders to purchase the freehold of the property.

Sir George Young: The Leasehold Reform Act 1967 gives leaseholders of most houses, but not leaseholders of flats, the right to purchase their freeholds. The number of dwellings exempt is not known. The Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 enables a court to order the compulsory acquisition by the leaseholders of flats of the landlord's interest in certain circumstances where he has been failing in his duties. Again, the number of exempt dwellings is not known. It is open to any leaseholder or group of leaseholders to seek to purchase the freehold of their dwelling by negotiation.

EC Environment Council

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he will be putting forward at the next European ministerial Environment Council on 20 and 21 December on (a) the management of hazardous waste, (b) the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances and (c) developing fiscal instruments to attain environmental protection and improvement objectives.

Mr. Trippier: The first two subjects are on the agenda for discussion at the Council on the basis of proposals submitted by the European Commission. I shall be pressing for agreement to these directives. The question of economic and fiscal mechanisms to achieve environmental objectives may also be discussed. I shall report to Parliament on the outcome of the Council in the usual way.

Local Authority Accounts

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Audit Commission regarding local authorities which are more than 12 months in breach of their statutory duty to produce accounts for audit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Audit Commission publishes each year a list of authorities which are in breach of their statutory duty to produce accounts for audit. It lists those which have not produced accounts by 31 December i.e. within nine months. That number fell from 80 for 1986-87 to 32 for 1987-88 and 29 for 1988-89. Our officials and the Commission's officers have discussed this position amongst other matters during their regular contacts.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities in England and Wales have not published their statements of account for the financial years (a) 1987-88, (b) 1986-87, (c) 1985-86 and (d) any earlier year.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the Department does not have this information.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment against how many local authorities in breach by more than 12 months of their statutory duty to publish their accounts or produce them for audit proceedings have been instituted.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is treated as a reasonable excuse for a local authority to have failed to publish its statement of account more than 12 months after being required by statute so to do.

Mr. Portillo: It would be for the court to decide in the circumstances of a particular case whether there was a reasonable excuse for a local authority to have failed to publish its statement of account by the statutory time limit.

Bathing Waters

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the studies and research into the effects of bathing or water sports in sea water contaminated by sewage; whether resources have been made available for the early completion of such studies and research on a comprehensive and scientifically validated basis indicated by the methodology proposed by the Langland bay study; and when the results will be made available.

Mr. Trippier: The Government supported further research last summer. A beach survey was undertaken at Ramsgate Sands with 2,000 beachgoers and a cohort study was conducted at Moreton (Wirral) using 310 volunteers. These further studies provided the opportunity to confirm the validity of the methodologies developed in the Langland Bay study. I expect to receive a report on these surveys next March and copies will be made available to the House.

The Government are anxious to establish as soon as possible the health risks, if any, of bathing in sewage contaminated sea water and is commissioning further research, jointly funded with the National Rivers Authority, using the methodologies developed over the last two years.

Community Charge

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the numbers of people registered, or registerable, under the National Assistance Act 1948, are used in the formulation of the standard spending assessments for the poll tax.

Mr. Key: No, not as such, though such individuals will often be included on other grounds within the indicators used in the calculation of the personal social services SSA element.

National Business Rate

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from the local government information unit concerning non-payment of the national business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: None.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will continue with the consultancy process that was established for the implementation of the EC directive on atmospheric pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend may have in mind the Large Combustion Plants Directive (88/609/EC). If so, I would refer him to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will be happy to continue to discuss the detailed implementation of the directive with those affected.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to deliver to the European Commission the United Kingdom's national programme for emission reductions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from existing large combustion plants.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom is sending to the European Commission this week its programme for achieving the cuts in emissions of sulphur dioxide (SO_2) and oxides of nitrogen (NOx) required by the large combustion plants directive. The planned reductions in each target year are greater than those required by the directive.

For SO_2, the planned reductions from existing United Kingdom large combustion plants are 21 per cent. by 1993, 45 per cent. by 1998 and 63 per cent. by 2003, and for NOx 21 per cent. by 1993 and 35 per cent. by 1998, in each case relative to 1980. The programme incorporates a plan backed up by legally binding controls.

The total investment of the electricity supply industry alone both on new, clean plant and new equipment for older plant over the next decade will be over £6 billion.

The United Kingdom is submitting the programme in good time for the 31 December deadline set in the directive.

Salford (Boundaries)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision with regard to the Local Government Boundaries Commission proposals for the city of Salford.

Mr. Key: Shortly.

Business Rates

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the non-payment of business rates for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Key: I have made no such estimates.

Oil Heaters

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has on the degree to which small waste oil burning appliances, used as a source of heat in garages and workshops, are contributors to airborne pollution.

Mr. Heseltine: There is only limited evidence of the scale of the problem, but appliances of this type are known to be sources of a variety of atmospheric pollutants, including lead and other heavy metals, hydrogen, chloride, NOx, and SO_2.

Nautical Archaeology

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to respond to the recommendations of the Joint Nautical Archaeology Policy Committee's report, "Heritage at Sea".

Mr. Trippier: We have responded today, and I am placing copies in the Library of the House.

In response to the report, we have already announced two main changes. These were set out in the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance". The first is the transfer of responsibility for the protection of historic wrecks in English waters from the Department of Transport to the Department of the Environment. This will bring together control of archaeology on land with that under water. Similar transfers will take place in relation to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The second is the preparation of a central record of historic wrecks by the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England. The commission in Scotland will be asked to take on a similar responsibility. In Wales, the Welsh Office will be reviewing the new work with the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments in Wales.

In the fuller response made today, we say that we are ready to develop, in discussion with the organisations concerned, a code of practice for sea-bed operators whose activities could affect wreck sites. We are also willing to exercise Government powers of ownership, where these can be established, in favour of conserving wreck sites and the artefacts recovered from them. We will consider sympathetically applications for special grant for the development of diver training in the skills required for underwater archaeology. We also make a commitment to make the best of existing salvage reporting arrangements to encourage important finds to be properly conserved and displayed.

The Government do not accept that there is a need for a new agency or legislation, but we intend to make the best use of the powers and resources available in the interests of conservation, and to review these matters once the new allocation of responsibilities has had time to take effect.

The Government are grateful to the joint committee for its work and hopes to have the benefit of its expertise and advice again on these matters in future.

Travellers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he now proposes to relax planning controls over sites for travelling showpeople.

Mr. Yeo: I have considered carefully, in the light of the responses to my Department's consultation paper "Sites for Travelling Showpeople", whether to introduce permitted development rights for the stationing of up to five caravans, inhabited by travelling showpeople and their families, and for the storage and maintenance of their fairground equipment.

I do not underestimate the difficulties which some showpeople have experienced in obtaining sites with planning permission from which to base their activities. However, the consultation exercise has highlighted the difficulty of reconciling any relaxation of planning control with safeguarding local amenity and the environment. Accordingly, I have decided not to introduce permitted development rights to establish sites for travelling showpeople.

My Department will, however, issue fresh guidance to local planning authorities which will emphasise that, both in formulating local and unitary development plan policies and in development control decisions, authorities should take full account of travelling showpeople's requirements for secure, long-term sites. My officials will work closely with the Showmen's Guild of Great Britain in preparing the guidance.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of his Department since 1 January 1985 giving the date and purpose of each survey.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Since 1 January 1985 the Department of the Environment has commissioned numerous surveys, including many small surveys, to local authorities, businesses and the general public. Some of these contained questions about opinions but a list of such surveys is not readily available.

Anglian Coastal Study

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he received the Anglian coastal study; and if he will now place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The initial phases of this study are complete and resulting data has been made available to interested parties. The remaining phase which should be completed next summer concentrates on field measurement which will provide valuable data for the detailed design of coastal defence. This information which will be the main output of the third phase will be stored in detabases managed by the Anglian region of the National Rivers Authority. The information will be made available to coastal defence authorities in the region and to this Department.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools Budgets

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the extra amount of money available to each school in Cumbria if 85 per cent. of the potential schools budget for the current year had been distributed under the conditions of his announcement of 11 December, Official Report, column 324.

Mr. Fallon: In the current year, Cumbria is delegating 82·53 per cent. of its potential schools budget. If that was increased to 85 per cent., on average that would release £7,440 to each school.

Notes:

1. Cumbria's potential schools budget in 1990-91 is £112·69 million.
2. Cumbria has 374 schools, of which 330 primary and 44 secondary.
3. The amount per school in the answer is rounded to the nearest £10.

Dental Schools

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give for each category A dental school (a) the number of unfilled technical jobs in biochemistry departments and (b) when he expects them to be filled.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information is not collected centrally about such local management matters.

Cerebral Palsy

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he gives to local education authorities concerning the funding of places in charitable and private institutions assisting cerebral palsy sufferers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Advice to local education authorities concerning the placement of children with statements in independent schools and non-maintained special schools is contained in circular 22/89, "Assessments and Statements of Special Educational Needs: Procedures within the Education, Health and Social Services".

Hornsey Centre for Children Learning

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the funding of the Hornsey centre for children learning; and if he will make a statement on its future.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations expressing concern about the future of the Hornsey centre for children learning. As we have made clear in replying to such letters, while we are sympathetic to these difficulties and acknowledge the work of the Hornsey centre, there is no prospect of the Department's being able to provide financial assistance.

London Education Authorities

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the total spending for the Inner London education authority for each year since 1980 and what proportion of its income was from central government sources; and if he will also list the spending figures for 1990-91 for each of the successor education authorities and the proportion of their income that is drawn from central Government sources.

Mr. Fallon: The net expenditure of the Inner London authority as recorded on the revenue outturn returns made to the Department of the Environment is shown in the table for all years from 1980-81 to 1988-89. Figures for the outturn expenditure in 1989-90 are not yet available. Grants received by the ILEA are shown for the same years. No rate support grant was received by the authority during this period because of its very high rateable resources. Consistent education budget figures for all the inner London boroughs for 1990-91 are not yet available.

Net spending of the Inner London education authority 1980-81 to 1989-90

Year	Net expenditure £ million[1]	Specific grant income £ million[2]	Specific grants as percentage of net expenditure
1980-81	674·5	12·7	1·9
1981-82	743·8	14·5	1·9
1982-83	803·3	15·4	1·9
1983-84	870·9	15·1	1·7
1985-86	956·1	20·3	2·1
1984-85	924·4	17·2	1·9
1986-87	1,033·0	24·9	2·4
1987-88	1,097·2	31·1	2·9
1988-89	1,074·8	41·3	3·8

[1] Net expenditure as reported on the Form RO1.

[2] The figures for grant exclude specific grant aid in support of mandatory awards, which has also been excluded from the expenditure column.

Special Purpose Grant

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department, in calculating the special purpose grant (Development) for grant-maintained schools, takes into account the local education authority contribution to education support grant and local education authority training grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The LEA contribution to expenditure supported by education support grants and local education authority training grants is treated as part of central LEA costs of which grant-maintained schools receive a per capita amount as part of their annual maintenance grant. Special purpose grant (development) is calculated by reference to the education support grants and local education authority training grants paid to LEAs.

Geography

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he now expects to lay draft statutory orders for geography in the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the recommendations on geography in the national curriculum made to him recently by the National Curriculum Council. He hopes to issue a draft order for consultation in time to introduce national curriculum geography in key stages 1, 2 and 3 in autumn 1991.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 17 December to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, if he will place the surveys listed in the Library.

Mr. Eggar: A copy of each of these reports on these projects, when completed, is placed in the Department's library and is available to researchers there. It has not been our practice to place copies elsewhere.

Bullers Wood School

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his decision to approve the catchment area for Bullers Wood grant-maintained school in the London borough of Bromley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend approved Bullers Wood school as grant maintained on 10 October 1990. To date, no representations regarding this decision have been received by the Department directly relating to the admissions arrangements.

Proposals by a school for grant-maintained status must contain the proposed admissions arrangements. My right hon. and learned Friend will continue to consider these on their merits taking all relevant factors, including any comments or objections, into account.

Pre-school Education

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the report of the committee of inquiry into the educational experience which should be offered to three and four-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is today publishing the report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. It treats the range of factors affecting the quality of provision carefully and helpfully. My right hon. and learned Friend and I are very grateful to our hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Angela Rumbold) and the members of her committee for this valuable contribution to the development of thinking about education before the age of five.

The report comes at a time of significantly increased financial provision for the education of the under-fives. In real terms, LEA expenditure on the under-fives is almost half as high again as it was a decade ago; and the proportion of under-fives in education has increased by over 17 per cent. at a time when the birth rate has been rising.

Against this background of growing participation, the Government believe that the existing diversity of provision for the under-fives, involving the private, voluntary and local authority sectors, is healthy and should be encouraged. Good-quality provision can make a valuable contribution to young children's development. The Government consider that parents are the best judges of their children's needs: some will prefer to make provision in the home for constructive play and early learning activities; some will look to playgroups; and others will seek nursery or infant classes or day nurseries. We are sending copies of the report to all local education and social services authorities; it will be for them to consider how the report should be acted on in their areas, but we hope that it will be carefully studied by local authorities and by all those working in the field.

This Department is working closely with the Department of Health to ensure that within the diversity of provision, there is a clear framework for local action on services for pre-school children; my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State announced the introduction of an education support grant for 1991-92 and the succeeding year to help authorities improve the planning and co-ordination of services for the under-fives, and my right hon. and learned Friend has recently announced a significant enhancement of my Department's grants to the Pre-school Playgroups Association and to the British Association for Early Childhood Education.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education and Library Boards (Advisers)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of advisers employed by each education and library board over the last five years and the cost of employing these advisers over the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Actual expenditure is not available in the form requested, but the following table has been prepared based on expenditure shown in boards' revised financial schemes.

Financial Year

Secondary School Pupils

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of children of secondary school age in each Eastern education and library board area over the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers are as follows:

Year	Belfast	Western	North-Eastern	South-Eastern	Southern
1981	36,869	27,503	36,353	27,586	31,171

Fallen Animals

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in the Strangford constituency.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in north Belfast.

Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in Lagan Valley.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in east Antrim.

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in South Antrim.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in Belfast, South.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the health and environmental implications of the decision by animal by-product plants not to accept fallen animals for disposal; and what proposals he has to provide alternative means of disposal of such animals in east Londonderry.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Upper Bann (Mr. Trimble) on 18 December at column 142.

Building Work

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 December 1990]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 December 1990]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 11 December 1990]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of his Department since 1 January 1985, giving the date and purpose of each survey.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 December 1990]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the work of the new joint arms control implementation group.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces explained the role of the joint arms control implementation group in his written answer on 6 March at column 622. The group is responsible to the Secretary of State for Defence for practical implementation of our obligations and exercise of our rights in the verification of arms control agreements.

Washington Embassy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to revise the size of the staff at the United Kingdom embassy in Washington DC.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None at present; staffing levels in Washington, like those for all British missions abroad, are regularly reviewed to ensure that they are appropriate to requirements.

Geneva Convention

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose to the United Nations Security Council a draft resolution reminding all states party to the Geneva convention of their legal duty to prosecute in the case of prima facie evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva convention by persons of any nationality.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: States party to the Geneva conventions are well aware of their legal duties since they have an obligation to ensure that grave breaches of the conventions are an offence under their national legislation.

Argentina

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters, in regard to nuclear weapons testing and prospects for Argentina signing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, were discussed with his Argentine counterparts or officials from the Argentine Foreign Ministry during the visit of Foreign Minister Cavallo to London on 11 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Cavallo took the opportunity of his visit to explain details of the joint declaration of 28 November on the common nuclear policy of Argentina and Brazil.

Israel

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends taking as a state signatory to the fourth Geneva convention if the Israeli Government proceed with their declared intention to deport members of the Palestinian civilian population of the west bank and Gaza who are protected persons under the provisions of the fourth Geneva convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made it clear that any such deportations would violate international law. We urge the Israeli Government not to proceed with them.

Belligerent Occupation

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose a draft resolution to the United Nations Security Council naming states recognised by the international consensus as being engaged in belligerent occupation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No, because it would be difficult to reach international consensus on such a list of states.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose to the United Nations Security Council a draft resolution reminding all states engaged in belligerent occupation of the implications of grave breaches of the Geneva convention, with particular regard to those states' treatment of the civilian population who are under occupation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. The obligations of states party to the Fourth Geneva convention were reiterated by the Security Council in its resolution 674 with reference to the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he will ask the Iranian ambassador to call on him to discuss the renewal of the death threat on Mr. Salman Rushdie by the Iranian Minister for Islamic Religious Affairs and the implications for international laws protecting individuals;

(2) what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking following the renewal of the death threat on Mr. Salman Rushdie by the Iranian Minister for Islamic Religious Affairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our chargé d'affaires in Tehran has expressed to the Iranian Ministry of Foreign Affairs our concern about certain recent statements made in Iran about Mr. Rushdie. We continue to understand that the Iranian Government respect international law and would not interfere in the internal affairs of any other country, any more than the United Kingdom would.

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any matters in regard to the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the Gulf region were discussed during the meeting of Foreign Affairs Ministers at the inter-governmental conference in Rome.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the surveys listed in his answer of 17 December to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. The surveys were commissioned on a private basis and were not intended to be made public.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any information, in the context of the United Kingdom's role as a depository power for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, concerning progress made in discussions between the respective Prime Ministers of North and South Korea on 11 December in particular in regard to the implementation of nuclear safeguards regimes in their respective countries, pursuant to each country's membership of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

West Bank and Gaza

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the Israeli Government to act in conformity with their obligation under the fourth Geneva convention concerning the protection of the civilian population of the West Bank and Gaza.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have reminded the Israeli Government many times of its obligation to administer the occupied territories in accordance with the provisions of the fourth Geneva convention.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses concerning the roles of the Iraqi state organisation for technical industries and the Iraqi military industrial commission in procuring nuclear or other sensitive technology and material usable in a nuclear weapons programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the present circumstances, it would not be appropriate to divulge information of this kind.

Immigration

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government will introduce their centrally organised scheme for DNA testing in immigration cases; and whether any changes are proposed to entry clearance fees.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have for some time now accepted that DNA profiling appears to be the most accurate method available for determining parentage in immigration cases. Several thousand cases have been satisfactorily determined on that basis through tests commissioned and paid for by the applicants themselves. My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for the Home Department announced on 14 June 1989 our intention to introduce a Government scheme for DNA testing as a means of resolving first time settlement applications where the relationship could not otherwise be established.

The necessary arrangements have now been completed and contracts awarded to two British companies, Cellmark Diagnostics Ltd. and University Diagnostics Ltd., to carry out DNS tests. In suitable cases, entry clearance officers at British diplomatic posts overseas will now be able to offer to arrange tests which will be carried out by these independent scientific experts on a commercial basis. As my right hon. Friend indicated in June 1989, DNA testing will not be offered as a matter of routine and will not be compulsory.

ECOs will offer to arrange tests with the consent of the applicant and sponsor in cases where the relevant relationships cannot be demonstrated easily by other means. If an applicant or his sponsor declines to undergo a test, that would not of itself be a ground for refusing the application. But if an ECO is not satisfied about the relationship on the basis of the evidence before him, the applicant will now have the option of taking a DNA test to resolve the matter. We believe that this will go a long way towards making disputes about family relationships a thing of the past.

In considering how to finance the scheme, we have sought to avoid imposing a significant burden either upon individual applicants who are invited to take a DNA test, or upon the taxpayer. The cost of such tests will therefore be covered by an increase in the fee charged for lodging all settlement applications. This increase will also cover the rise in administrative costs.

Revised fees are to be introduced with effect from 14 January 1991. These were approved by the Privy Council on 19 December. The principal fees will be as follows:

Single entry clearance	20	no change
Single entry clearance for those applicants under 25 years of age	10	new category
Double entry clearance	30	no change
Multiple entry clearance
—for two years validity	40	reduction of £4
—for five years validity	85	new category
Application for settlement or marriage	80	increase of £20
Other long term entry clearances	60	no change

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 December.

Mr. Hurd: A meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council took place in Brussels on 18 and 19 December. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed Mediterranean policy and reached informal agreement on the aid and trade aspects of the Community's relations with the Mediterranean for 1991-96. Informal agreement was also reached on the Asia and Latin America programme for 1991-95, and the resources to be allocated to it.

The Council adopted negotiating mandates for association agreements with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. Negotiations will begin on 20 December. A mandate was also agreed for the negotiations of a customs union with San Marino. The Council reviewed progress on the negotiations between the Community and the European Free Trade Association on the creation of a European economic area and endorsed steps to move the negotiations forward at the EC/EFTA ministerial meeting on 19 December.

The Council reached agreement on the negotiating mandate for a new financial protocol to the EC/Yugoslavia co-operation agreement. A meeting of the EC/Yugoslavia Co-operation Council took place in the margins, as did a meeting of the EC/Egypt Co-operation Council.

On the Gulf, Ministers reaffirmed their position that any meeting between the Iraqi Foreign Minister and the EC presidency must follow and not precede a meeting between President Bush and the Iraqis.

Mercenaries

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government intend to sign the international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not intend to sign the convention, which would be difficult to implement in United Kingdom law. We will continue to keep the question of mercenaries under review.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has considered research conducted by the National Consumer Council into the use, frequency and standards of bus services since deregulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A copy of the National Consumer Council's report, "Have the buses caught up yet?" was sent to my Department in October. The responsibility for providing bus services and information about them is, under the Transport Act 1985, for bus operators and local authorities and I have suggested that the NCC should make their useful review readily available to those bodies.

Speedlink

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the effect of the closure of the Speedlink rail freight service on the number of lorry loads per day on Scotland's road network.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is still in discussion with customers about Speedlink traffic following its announcement last week that the Speedlink network will close in July 1991. In Scotland, BR expects to retain up to half of the domestic freigh carried by Speedlink, and BR currently estimates that the maximum effect will be no more than 150 extra lorryloads a day on Scotland's roads.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research was carried out into the effect which the cessation of the Speedlink service would have on employment in Scotland, and in particular within the Highlands and Islands; and if he will place full details of research in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail currently employs about 250 people in Scotland specifically on Speedlink traffic, and expects to deploy many of them to other work, including alternative trainload services. British Rail is still in discussion with customers about their Speedlink traffic and the effects on employment by BR customers, road hauliers and others cannot be assessed at present.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research was carried out into the effect which the cessation of the speedlink service would have upon the timber industry in Scotland; and if he will place full details of any such research in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is still in discussion with timber industry customers about their speedlink traffic, but BR currently understands that alternative transport arrangements will be made by the timber industry for any traffic not retained on rail.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will disclose the findings of any research carried out into the effect which the impending cessation of British Rail speedlink service may have upon the volume of freight traffic on the road network; and if he will place full details of any such research in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: BR currently estimates that the maximum increase in road freight will be 1·5 million tonnes—equivalent to some 0·06 per cent. of total United Kingdom freight.

M42-M40 Junction

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the junction of the M42 motorway and M40 motorway was opened; when its use was restricted by cones; how many cones are being used at this junction at present; what is the estimated cost of these cones; and when he expects these cones to be removed.

Mr. Chope: The M40-M42 junction opened on 19 December 1989. Cones have restricted the M40 to M42 northbound link road to a single lane since opening. From 8 October 1990 cones have been used throughout the interchange as part of various traffic management measures during the layout alterations presently being undertaken there. The cost of cones is included in the price for the work. Subject to favourable weather conditions the carriageway layout alterations are expected to be completed and the cones removed for Christmas.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the purpose of the work being undertaken at the junction of the M40 motorway and M42 motorway; what is the cost of this work; when this work began; when he expects this work to be completed; and why this work was not undertaken during the construction of this junction.

Mr. Chope: A £1·5 million contract commenced on 8 October 1990 to improve traffic flows at the M40-M42 junction. Subject to favourable weather conditions, the carriageway layout alterations are expected to be complete for Christmas. Traffic flows through the junction have increased significantly since the start of work on the M40 Warwick section. So as to avoid the risk of delay to that contract a separate contract for the improvement of the junction was let.

Aston Expressway

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated daily cost to the public as a result of the closure of the slip road between the Aston expressway and spaghetti junction in Birmingham.

Mr. Chope: The closure of the slip roads between Aston expressway and the Tyburn road has diverted traffic onto the local road network. The Department does not have a traffic model of this network and can not therefore calculate the additional cost of traffic delays and increased journey times.

It is understood that Birmingham city council engineer's department have made an approximate estimate of the delay cost at £20,000 per working day.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he expects the slip road between the Aston expressway and spaghetti junction in Birmingham to be reopened before 26 August 1991.

Mr. Chope: The slip roads between Tyburn road and Aston expressway should be re-opened to traffic by July 1991.

Railways Act 1974 (Grant)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the allowable cost per sensitive lorry mile as used for determination of eligibility for grant under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 for each year of operation; and whether he will take steps to widen the definition of sensitive lorry mile, and introduce a sliding scale of allowable cost giving a high level of potential grant towards urban single carriageways tapering to a lower level for uncongested rural motorways.

Mr. Freeman: The prevailing cost ceiling per sensitive lorry mile for grants under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 is as follows:

Year	SLM ceiling (cash) pence
1975-81	25
1981-82	30
1982-84	45
1984-85	47
1986-89	28
1990	34

The ceiling was reduced at the end of 1985 to accord with the implied weighting attributable to environmental factors in new road assessment.

The definition of a sensitive lorry mile, and the monetary valuation ascribed to each SLM, are issues being addressed by a current internal Department review of freight facilities grants.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what process of monitoring and checking exists for ensuring that sums paid out in grant under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 are actually expended for the purposes for which they were made; and if he will review the adequacy of such processes.

Mr. Freeman: Instalments of grant are paid against claims certified by independent auditors. A proportion of grant is retained until Departmental officials have visited the site to verify that grant-aided facilities are in place. The traffic actually carried by grant-aided facilities is monitored annually throughout the period (usually 10 years) over which the application for grant was assessed. The adequacy of these grant mechanisms is being considered as part of the current review of freight facilities grants.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since inception, the total sums paid out in grants made under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974; and if he will place in the Library details of each recipient of such grant, the amount or amounts involved, those which are no longer in use, and those which following the cessation of the British Rail speedlink service will no longer be used.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1975, grants under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 have been awarded as follows:

Year	£ million (cash)
1975	0·5
1976	2·3
1977	4·0
1978	9·0
1979	4·7
1980	7·6
1981	4·3
1982	3·4
1983	6·0
1984	7·5
1985	9·0
1986	2·7
1987	2·6
1988	0·7

The figures are rounded and comprise grants awarded in England, Scotland and Wales. Grants in Scotland and Wales are administered by the Scottish Development Department and Welsh Office respectively. Information in the form requested concerning recipients of grant and the amounts involved is being compiled. It will be placed in the Library shortly. Information concerning the continued use of grant-aided facilities is commercially sensitive.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average time taken to process applications for grant under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 between submission of grant application until final approval for each of the last 15 years; and whether he will review the procedures governing such applications.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not record the information requested and it could not be produced except at disproportionate cost. The procedures for processing grant applications are being considered as part of the current review of freight facilities grants.

M6 (Gravelly Hill Interchange)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the technical matters which needed to be resolved before work on a replacement structure at the Gravelly hill interchange of the M6 motorway could begin and were still to be resolved on 28 November; and who has been responsible for the resolution of these technical matters.

Mr. Chope: By 28 November the only outstanding matters were the refinement of the repair options and the assessment of the sub-structure and of the damage to the adjacent bridge span. These matters were resolved by 3 December.

My Department was responsible for the resolution of these technical matters.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the work on a replacement structure at the Gravelly hill interchange of the M6 motorway to begin; when he expects this work to be completed; which contractor is going to be employed for this work; what is the value of the contract for this work; and who will pay for this work.

Mr. Chope: Three separate contracts are to be employed for the repair work. These three contracts are presently at various stages of tender and award. One has been awarded to Thermic UK Ltd. for demolition of the damaged structure in the sum of £137,262. The Department is about to let a contract for the fabrication of steelwork and has invited tenders for the main construction work. Some works preparatory to the start of demolition are already in hand.

It is hoped that all works will be complete by the end of July 1991.

The damage resulting from the accident is the subject of an insurance claim.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long the special scaffolding under one row of columns supporting the M6 motorway at the Gravelly Hill interchange has been in place; what is the purpose and cost; and who was responsible for checking the calculations as to its stability.

Mr. Chope: Two contracts are currently in progress at Gravelly Hill interchange and both involve scaffolding around the viaduct supports. One contract started in December 1989 and the other in August 1990. The scaffolding provides a working platform for the contractors and does not support the viaducts. In one contract there is a substantial temporary steel truss which allows areas of concrete to be broken out while traffic is still using the viaduct.

The design and the check of the working platform scaffold is the responsibility of the contractor. Any temporary support to the motorway viaduct structure is designed and checked by the Department's consulting engineers. The costs of the scaffold and temporary supports are not immediately available and I will write to the hon. Member further on this.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent assessments he has made and plans to make in evaluating the comparative safety of transporting ammunition by road or by rail.

Mr. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research and research projects have been carried out or commissioned by his Department for each of the last five years, relating to the transportation of hazardous and inflammable goods by road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on dangerous substances sub-committee is studying the major hazards aspects of the transport of such substances. The report of that work, which includes a quantified risk assessment of the transport of specific substances including explosives by road and by rail, is due next year.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why a train carrying spent nuclear fuel flasks was taken into sidings at Bletchley on the morning of 23 November; what risks were posed by the halting of the train to the people of Bletchley and Milton Keynes; what emergency procedures were set in action; and how many such nuclear trains have been halted non-routinely in sidings over the past year.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from British Rail that a Temple Mills-Crewe nuclear flask train was stopped when one of its vehicles activated a hot axle-box detector at the approach to Bletchley. It was taken forward into a loop line where it was examined, but no fault found. The fire brigade was in attendance and the police were on stand-by while the examination was taking place. There was no risk to local residents. There is no requirement for such incidents, in which neither an accident has occurred nor any fault has been found, to be reported to Her Majesty's railways inspectorate.

Dial-A-Ride

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the London Dial-A-Ride regionalisation proposals to be tested in a trial region; and which region this will be.

Mr. Freeman: London Transport is responsible for administering the London Dial-A-Ride scheme, which is funded by Government grant. They have been considering plans to regionalise the service for over two years, with a view to obtaining a more efficient service for users and better value for money.

In order to develop detailed workable proposals in one region before agreeing to full regionalisation, LT held discussions with existing management committees of the six services in north-east London. As a result of those discussions, LT are now convinced of the benefits which full regionalisation will bring. I understand they are therefore developing regional boards of user representatives throughout London which will be responsible for introducing regional management structures and regional policies over the next 12-18 months. London Transport have no plans to test the benefits in a trial region before full implementation.

Road Accidents (Freight Transport)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of fatalities, and the number of serious injuries arising from (a) road accidents involving heavy goods vehicles and (b) freight trains, in each of the last fifteen years.

Mr. Freeman: (a) The information requested is given in the table for the years 1979 to 1989. Information for earlier years is only available at disproportionate cost.

(a) Casualties in road accidents involving heavy goods vehicles: Great Britain: 1979 to 1989

Year	Killed	Seriously injured	All KSI[1]
1979	1,063	5,878	6,941
1980	859	5,119	5,978
1981	851	4,919	5,770
1982	875	4,816	5,691
1983	811	4,244	5,055
1984	876	4,476	5,352
1985	811	4,331	5,142
1986	908	4,391	5,299
1987	910	4,380	5,290
1988	900	4,655	5,555
1989	989	4,780	5,769

[1] Killed or seriously injured.

(b) The information requested in relation to freight trains is not readily available.

A10 (Hoddesdon-Cambridge)

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to appoint consultants to carry out the A10 Hoddesdon to Cambridge study.

Mr. Chope: Early in the new year.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the surveys referred to in his answer of 17 December to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. McLoughlin: The list comprises about 370 surveys and I am therefore sending it separately to the hon. Member.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the sum which British Rail is planning to invest in order to exploit the opportunities offered by the channel tunnel and provide a breakdown of the projects involved and the amount of money to be spent on each programme.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail currently plans to invest around £1·5 billion (in 1990-91 prices) to provide inter-national rail services in the early years after the tunnel opens. Major projects already approved by the Government include some £400 million for inter-capital passenger trains, over £100 million for the terminal at Waterloo, £75 million for a maintenance depot in west London, £80 million for the first batch of international freight locomotives and Tonbridge-Redhill electrification. BR's plans also include a station at Ashford, night and north of London passenger services and further investment in freight facilities. In addition we expect in the spring to receive British Rail's proposals for a new line between London and the tunnel.

M40 Motorway

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the M40 motorway to be completed and available for public use.

Mr. Chope: The M40 motorway is expected to be completed and open to traffic by mid-January 1991.

Road Closures (Bad Weather)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years were the A62, M62, A66 and A69 respectively, closed due to inclement weather.

Mr. Chope: The information (by financial year) is as follows:

	M62	A62	A66	A69
1982-83	0	0	n/a	0
1984-85	0	0	n/a	0
1985-86	0	2	8	0
1986-87	1	1	1	0
1990-91	0	1	1	0

These figures do not include very short-term closures to permit clearance of the carriageway following accidents or vehicle breakdown associated with inclement weather.

M40

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the contract dates for completion of each remaining section of the M40 motorway; and if he will list the main contractor for each section.

Mr. Chope: The contract dates for completion of each remaining section of the M40 motorway and the main contractors are as follows:

Contract	Contractor	Contract dates for completion
Gaydon Contract	R. M. Douglas Construction Ltd.	1 January 1991
Banbury Bypass—Contract IV	Balfour Beatty	9 December 1990
Banbury Bypass—Contract III	Tarmac Construction Ltd.	18 November 1990
Banbury Bypass—Contract II	John Mowlem and Company	12 June 1990
Banbury Bypass—Contract I	Tarmac Construction Ltd.	26 February 1991
Waterstock to Wendlebury	McAlpine/Fairclough Joint Venture	26 May 1991

The complete road is due to be opened in mid-January 1991.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if bonus or enhancement payments have been paid to contractors meeting earlier deadlines for construction of sections of the M40 motorway.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected cost of construction for each of the remaining sections of the M40 motorway.

Mr. Chope: The tender prices submitted by the successful contractors for each of the remaining section of the M40 motorway are as follows:

Gaydon	33,989,302
Banbury contract 4	51,712,702
Banbury contract 3	52,199,044
Banbury contract 2	17,910,558
Banbury contract 1	24,197,510
Waterstock-Wendlebury	64,100,727

Final costs are not available.

Transport Council

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the meeting of the European Community Transport Council on 17 and 18 December.

Mr. Rifkind: I attended the meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers which was held in Brussels on 17-18 December.

I am pleased with the progress made at the Council.

On inland transport, the Council agreed a road haulage package which included a 40 per cent. increase in Community road haulage quotas for each of the years 1991 and 1992; an additional one-off increase in the EC quota to take account of German unification; and measures to be taken in the event of a "crisis" in the road haulage market. Agreement was also reached on a regulation to increase the maximum permitted length of road trains from 18·0 m to 18·35 m; and on a directive on combined transport which will give a useful stimulus to this mode of transport.

Other inland transport matters were also discussed, but without conclusions being reached. The Council briefly noted the Commisssion's recent proposals on vehicle tax harmonisation. On third country transit, the Commission reported that while the negotiations on third country transit with Yugoslavia were within sight of a successful conclusion, those with Austria and Switzerland had made much less progress. It was nevertheless agreed to continue bilateral negotiations with the Alpine countries for a further six months. The Commission also reported that its working group had reached agreement on guidelines for a high speed rail network. Ministers resolved that further work should be undertaken, including the commercial evaluation of possible network links. There was a brief discussion of road safety issues.

On air transport, measures were agreed on air cargo services and denied boarding compensation; there was some discussion of predatory practices; and the Commission reported on negotiations with Norway and Sweden. The air cargo measure covers scheduled and non-scheduled services conducted as purely cargo operations. It provides liberalised access to the air cargo market and is the basis for further measures to create a truly single market in this sector by 1992. The other agreed measure provides for the payment of minimum levels of compensation to passengers who are denied boarding on a flight onto which they were booked. On predatory practices I reiterated the United Kingdom's strongly held view that adequate measures must be put in place to prevent unfair practices by air carriers. The Commission's proposal will be brought back to the Council after further work has been done on it.

On shipping, the Commission was given a firm remit to prepare proposals for a two stage approach to cabotage liberalisation, in which the main phase would be completed by the end of 1993. The second phase, service between the mainland and islands and between islands, would follow after an interval yet to be agreed. This was a major step forward and I hope that we make good progress on the detail under the next Presidency.

The Council also agreed in principle to a regulation facilitating the transfer of vessels from one member state's register to another to free shipowners from the costs and administrative procedures involved in a change of register within the Community. This is a useful measure which is very much in the spirit of the single market. Other shipping items included a progress report from the Commission on their package of proposals for the second stage of Community shipping policy; a discussion of the draft rules of procedure for the UNCTAD liner code review conference; and a discussion of negotiations with west and central African countries.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Civil Aviation Authority has responded to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the authority's provision of navigation and air traffic control to civil aircraft published in July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Civil Aviation Authority publishes its initial response today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The Commission was particularly asked to comment on whether and to what extent the authority had implemented the recommendations of their 1983 report; the appropriateness of the authority's investment management arrangements; the adequacy of the authority's mechanisms for improving the efficiency of services. The services provided to military aircraft and the authority's regulatory activities were excluded from the inquiry.

The Commission found that significant progress had been made in reforming working practices, improving corporate planning, setting clear corporate and individual objectives, introducing performance-related pay, managing the investment programme, and making the organisation more accountable to users. The Commission praised the CAA's safety record against the background of a marked growth in air traffic, and its contribution, through Eurocontrol, towards the harmonisation of air traffic services in Europe. The Commission concluded that the CAA was not pursuing a course of conduct against the public interest. There remained scope for improvement in some areas, in particular manpower planning had not yet attained a standard satisfactory to the Commission or thed CAA's management.

The authority in its response says that it has accepted all but one of the MMC's 40 recommendations, and that work has already begun on implementing many of them.

I endorse the Commission's recognition of the very great progress made by the CAA under its present Chairman; of the CAA's safety record; and of its valuable work in Europe. The Authority's response clearly demonstrates their determination to achieve further improvements in their management practices, and I am pleased to see that many of the Commission's recommendations are already being implemented.

The MMC recommended that I should review in 1996 whether the CAA and national air traffic services (NATS) should be separated. I agree that there should be no change at present, but that it will be appropriate to reconsider the issue later in the current investment cycle.

I am asking the chairman of the authority to keep me informed of his progress in implementing the MMC's detailed recommendations.

Tachographs

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions he has reached on the serialisation of tachograph charts.

Mr. Chope: I have concluded that despite the superficial attractions of serialisation, it would not, on balance, be worthwhile. The offences which it was suggested serialisation might help detect are already detected by other means. Serialisation would add unnecessarily to the costs both of industry and the Department's enforcement staff.

Speed Limits

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will issue advice on lower speed limits in residential areas.

Mr. Chope: Guidance to local authorities on circumstances where 20 mph speed limits might be suitable has been issued.

I have placed copies in the Library.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Peter Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide credit approval to enable the electrification of the railway lines between Chester, Ellesmere Port and Hooton.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend is happy to announce that, subject to agreement with the parties on an appropriate expenditure profile, he can make credit approvals available to enable this project to begin in 1991-92.

Channel Tunnel Rail Freight

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about investment in channel tunnel rail freight services.

Mr. Freeman: BR is taking forward its plans and has announced that the first of its key channel tunnel regional freight terminals, which will be built with private sector partners, is to be at Wakefield to serve Yorkshire and Humberside. I have today approved British Rail's proposal to invest over £20 million in a further ten class 92 dual-voltage electric locomotives for channel tunnel freight, in addition to the 20 locomotives that we approved last May.

CIVIL SERVICE

EC Nationals

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he plans to make changes to the legislation which governs the employment in the civil service of nationals of other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Renton: The Government are considering the implications of article 48 of the treaty of Rome for employment in the civil service of nationals of other member states and for our domestic legislation. An announcement will be made as soon as the Government have reached a conclusion on this matter.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of his office over the most recent convenient period.

Mr. Renton: The Office of the Minister for the Civil Service, which forms a part of the Cabinet Office, regularly seeks customers' views of the effectiveness of services provided. In addition the following opinion surveys have been conducted since 1 April 1990:

Evaluation of the Senior Management Development Programme
Consultants: Peat, Marwick, McLintock
Due to report: January 1991.
Pilot Study on Undergraduate Attitudes to Civil Service Careers
Consultants: Cragg, Ross and Dawson Ltd.
Conducted: Summer 1990.
Study of Serving Staff's Attitudes to Civil Service Careers
Surveyors: Institute of Manpower Studies
Conducted: Summer 1990.

The remainder of the Cabinet Office has not conducted or commissioned any opinion surveys during that time.

THE ARTS

Quaker Tapestry

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister for the Arts if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Quaker tapestry to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Renton: I considered an application for this exhibition to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall and gave my permission on 30 November 1990.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Government expenditure in the United Kingdom under the common agricultural policy for 1990-91 is estimated at about £1,900 million. This covers market support and structural aid schemes. In addition, the United Kingdom Exchequer supports CAP spending elsewhere in the Community through our net contribution to the EC budget, which in 1990-91 is estimated at about £2,100 million. However, this sum is not allocated to particular elements of the budget, such as agriculture.

Agricultural Chemicals

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to accelerate the rate of processing applications for the registration of agricultural chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: The most important step is to increase the number of scientific staff in MAFF regulating pesticides by 60 per cent. in 1990-91.

Christmas Trees (Acid Rain)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has made any recent study of the effects of acid rain on the stock of Christmas trees grown for use in the current year.

Mr. Maclean: The Forestry Commission's research into the effects of air pollution includes experimental work on the species which are most commonly used as Christmas trees. There is no evidence that acid rain has had any significant effect on Christmas trees.

Farm Reservoirs

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grants are available to farmers for the construction of farm reservoirs.

Mr. Curry: In line with the Government's policy of concentrating its aid on environmental investments rather than on those intended to increase production, grants for the construction of reservoirs are no longer available.

Scrapie

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) further to the letter in the Veterinary Record of 15 December from the head of his veterinary investigation section, how many scrapie-affected (a) sheep and (b) goats he expects to receive for his research purposes;

(2) how many sheep carcases he has received between 17 November and 15 December; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he intends to extend his study into the time-temperature combinations required to incubate the scrapie agent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are seeking 4,000 brains of scrapie affected sheep and goats as part of a research study to determine time-temperature combinations required to inactivate the scrapie agent. Between 17 November and 15 December 55 sheep carcases were submitted to veterinary investigation centres in England and Wales for scrapie diagnosis.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the irradiation plants in EC countries which have received official authorisation to import irradiated food in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No such authorisation have been granted.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the irradiation plants in the non-EC countries for which he has given approval for the import of irradiated food into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No such plants have received approval.

Fishery Protection

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the final period of his charter of MV Southella for fishery protection duties; what was the cost of the charter; and if he proposes to undertake a similar charter in 1991-92.

Mr. Maclean: The MV Southella charter to carry out fishery protection duties commenced on 18 July 1990, and was concluded on 23 October 1990. The cost of the charter, including additional inspectorate costs for staff carried on board, totalled £327,452. A decision on whether to charter a vessel next year will depend on the availability of Royal Navy ships, the fisheries protection task to be carried out and the availability of resources.

Bovine Offal

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has any information about the export of animal protein derived from bovine offal from the United Kingdom to non-EC countries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is monitoring the trade to non-EC countries of animal protein derived from bovine offal; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he intends to introduce legislation to prevent the export of animal protein derived from bovine offal to non-EC countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that no exports of animal protein material derived from specified bovine offal are taking place. Nevertheless, I am pursuing the possibility of introducing legislation to prohibit the export of such material to non-EC countries for use in animal feed.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research establishments and projects respectively which have been granted moneys from his Department for research into BSE; and if he will list the amounts involved.

Mr. Maclean: The following BSE research projects are being funded by my Department in 1990-91.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been allocated to BSE research in each financial year.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has allocated the following funds for BSE research:

	£ million
Outturn expenditure:
1987-88	0·2
1988-89	0·3
1989-90	1·0
Forecast expenditure:
1990-91	3·1
1992-93	4·3

This is in addition to the substantial funds that have been made available by the Department of Education and Science for slow virus research and the high priority research that has been set in hand by the Department of Health.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cambodia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the United Nations to expand and accelerate development and reconstruction aid to Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: A number of United Nations agencies are already providing humanitarian aid in Cambodia and Britain is supporting their work. The United Nations development programme (UNDP) has indicated that it could begin operations in Cambodia once the Supreme National Council (SNC) has appointed its chairman and United Nations representative and is recognised by the United Nations as a Government structure. We hope that at their forthcoming meeting in Paris the SNC members will resolve their differences over the chairmanship so that the peace process can move forward.

Global Environmental Facility

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the establishment of the global environmental facility under the collective sponsorship of the World bank and the United Nations environment programme and development programme.

Mrs. Chalker: I warmly welcome the establishment of the global environment facility (GEF). It is designed to help developing countries tackle global environmental problems including climate change, ozone depletion, pollution of international waters and the loss of biological diversity. Under climate change, for example, the GEF is likely to finance energy efficiency and energy conservation projects. It will provide grants for projects in developing countries which have substantial global benefits but would not be justified solely by the national benefits to the country concerned. All major donor countries and a number of developing countries are likely to contribute to the Facility. It will be managed jointly by the World bank, the United Nations environment programme and the United Nations development programme.

Britain is one of the first and leading contributors to the GEF. We will be contributing £40·3 million to the core facility of the GEF. We are contributing a further $15 million (approximately £7·8 million) to the funding mechanism established in June under the Montreal protocol to help developing countries phase out ozone depletion substances, which we hope to see managed as part of the GEF.

Our contribution will be managed by the Overseas Development Administration, but is separate from our aid budget for developing countries. ODA officials will attend the semi annual meeting of participants of the GEF which will agree its work programme. The first investments are likely to be approved from next June.

PRIME MINISTER

Minister for Industry

Sir John Farr: To ask the Prime Minister if he will dismiss the Minister for Industry, and appoint a Minister designated with the specific task of recovering the disappearing presence of home industry on the world stage.

The Prime Minister: No. The Government are pursuing policies to promote an environment in which business can flourish. The United Kingdom's share of world trade in manufactures has stabilised after decades of decline, and is set to rise in 1990 for the second year running.

Nuclear Weapons Treaties

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the policies to be advanced by the United Kingdom delegation to the non-proliferation and nuclear test ban negotiations starting on 7 January.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom delegation to the partial test ban treaty amendment conference will make clear our view that war is best prevented by keeping a sensible mix of conventional and nuclear weapons which would present any possible aggressor with risks out of proportion to any possible gain. If United Kingdom nuclear forces are to be a sure deterrent they must be kept effective and up to date: that requires nuclear testing.

D Notices

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Prime Minister how many D notices have been issued since August and how many involved (a) terrorism and (b) the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: None.

Health Service Pay Report

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister when the second supplement to the seventh report of the review body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and the professions applied to medicine will be published.

The Prime Minister: The review body's second supplement, which deals with the pay of senior nurses and midwives after the introduction of a new pay structure on 1 January 1991, is being published today. The Government are most grateful to the review body for the additional work they have undertaken to prepare this report.

The report recommends that the pay spine and pay ranges under the new structure should be as proposed in joint evidence by the staff and management sides of the nursing and midwifery staffs negotiating council, and that the rates of London weighting payable should be the same as those which senior managers currently receive. The Government have decided to accept the review body's recommendations.

Government Functions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen), Official Report, 30 November, column 504, if he will now answer questions concerning (a) the membership of Cabinet sub-committees, (b) the internal workings of Government and (c) advice given to Ministers.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 30 November at column 504.

Press Briefings

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen), Official Report, 3 December, column 44, whether he will set out the reasons for continuing the confidential daily briefings for journalists by his press secretary.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 3 December at column 44.

Minister for Science

Dr. Bray: To ask the Prime Minister if he will appoint a Minister for Science, Technology and Research with responsibility for the co-ordination of government science and technology policy, the science budget, the research councils, common service research organisations including the Meteorological Office, and for the representation of Britain in European Community and other international science councils.

The Prime Minister: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 11 December at column 330.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list any opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of the Cabinet Office.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that he received from my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office, earlier today.

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will visit Jordan to discuss ecological problems of a Gulf war;

(2) if he will visit Iran to discuss ecological problems of a Gulf war;

(3) if he will visit Yemen to discuss ecological problems of a Gulf war;

(4) if he will discuss with EEC leaders the possibility of a group of Prime Ministers going to Baghdad to discuss the human and ecological effects of a Gulf war and Iraq's view of middle eastern boundaries and ethnic questions.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Debt

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current total amount outstanding on the national debt; if he will express the figure as a percentage of gross domestic product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: Net public sector debt was £150·6 billion at end March 1990. This represented 28 per cent. of gross domestic product and compares with a net public sector debt of 51 per cent. of gross domestic product at end March 1979.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the savings to the Treasury in reduced interest payments caused by the repayment of the national debt for each year since 1987.

Mr. Maples: I estimate that the reduction in interest payments as a result of the successive public sector debt repayments since 1987 will be approximately £3 billion every year.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the Treasury has reduced the national debt for each year since 1987.

Mr. Maples: The figures requested are given in the table:

Net public sector debt

	£ billion	Percentage of GDP[1]
At end March
1987	171·8	43
1988	171·4	38
1989	157·8	32
1990	150·6	28

[1] Gross domestic product adjusted for the abolition of domestic rates.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to remove local authority borrowing from the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on allowing local authorities to borrow money in the open market.

Mr. Maples: Local authorities' powers to borrow money are set out in Part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Within those constraints, there is no limit on the proportion authorities may borrow on the market.

Welfare and Social Security

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to propose the introduction into United Kingdom law of article 13(g) of the sixth directive of the European Community regarding the supply of goods and services linked to welfare and social security work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Group 7, schedule 6 of the VAT Act 1983 reflects article 13A1(g) of the directive by allowing VAT exemption for the supply, otherwise than for profit, by a charity or public body of welfare services and of goods supplied in connection therewith.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition of real convergence is used for the purpose of policy development in respect of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Maude: A number of factors need to be taken into account when assessing the degree of economic convergence among member states of the Community. These include inflation differentials between member states, budget balances in member states, progress towards completion of the single market, and progress towards increasing labour market flexibility in member states.

Media Advisory Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the media advisory service has been made operational in connection with the Gulf crisis; if he will name the chairman of the media advisory service; and whether the Central Office of Information report entitled "A Plan for a Media Advisory Service: The No Win War" will be made available to the House.

Mr. Maples: There are no plans at present to activate the media advisory service in connection with the Gulf crisis. The chairman designate of the service has not yet been announced. The Central Office of Information report entitled, "A Plan for a Media Advisory Service: The No Win War", was intended for inter-departmental discussion and restricted in its circulation.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the increase in duty on cigarettes in the 1990 Budget had on the retail prices index.

Mr. Maples: The increase in excise duties on cigarettes in the 1990 Budget added nearly 0·2 percentage points to the retail prices index, assuming that it was passed on in full by retailers.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Maude: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 17 December. The Minister of State for Corporate Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom.

Agreement was reached on the general principles which will form the basis of the system for excise controls after 1992. The raising of travellers' allowances was also discussed and it was decided that an agreement should be reached before 31 March 1991. Meanwhile significant progress was made in discussing derogations from the present limits for Denmark and Ireland. As a result, we understand that Ireland will substantially increase her limits on private travellers' duty paid purchases from 1 January 1991. This will be of considerable benefit to traders in Northern Ireland.

An agreement in principle to a common position on the Money Laundering Directive was also reached and, once the legal text has been satisfactorily finalised, this common position should now be formally adopted shortly. The proposed directive is due to take effect from 1 January 1993 and will assist member states in countering the laundering of profits from drug trafficking.

Aid to the Soviet Union and eastern Europe was discussed in the light of agreements for food aid and other assistance reached at the European Council. A proposal to offer guarantees to the European Investment Bank, which would enable the bank to make loans to Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Romania, was also discussed. The Council agreed in principle to the participation of the Community in a loan to Czechoslovakia along with other members of the G24 and possibly the oil producing Arab states.

Discussion of the Investment Services Directive and of a proposal for a reinsurance pool for export credits to eastern Europe was postponed.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any plans to harmonise VAT on children's clothing, food and books.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: While the European Commission has made certain VAT harmonisation proposals, the Government have consistently made it clear that it does not consider centrally determined tax approximation necessary or desirable for completion of the single market. The United Kingdom's position is ultimately safeguarded, in that changes to EC tax law require the unanimous agreement of member states.

North Sea Oil

Mr. David Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the profits likely to accrue to the oil industry in the North sea arising from the increased price of oil.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 December 1990]: Profits accruing to the oil industry in the North sea depend on many factors and it is not possible at this stage to assess the effect of higher oil prices with precision. However, in terms of broad magnitude the increase in net of tax profits in the second half of 1990 may be around £¾ billion.

ENERGY

Peat

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, in the light of current concern over peat extraction, his Department will reconsider the inclusion of peat on the Department's list of renewable energy sources.

Mr. Moynihan: Over the past few years my Department has undertaken some limited research and development into the use of peat as an industrial fuel covering both the technical aspects and market potential of peat. Our recent studies have concluded that for industrial applications peat is not an economic proposition and the only real market for peat as a fuel is in the domestic sector (the traditional use of peat in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland). There is therefore no justification for the Department of Energy to fund further research in this sector once the results of the present studies have been published. Some of the data obtained about peat as part of our research programme should make a useful contribution to the conservation activities undertaken by organisations such as the Nature Conservancy Council and Royal Society for Nature Conservation.

Energy Supply

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's policy on promoting the use of recycled materials, renewable energies and combined heat and power schemes at (a) the energy technology support unit at Harwell and (b) other departmental establishments were relevant to his Department's activities.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government's policies for the use of recycled materials, renewable energies and combined heat and power are set out in the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance". My Department's policy is to stimulate the development and application of renewable sources of energy, including energy from waste, wherever they have prospects of being economically competitive and environmentally acceptable. In support of this policy my Department has a substantial, and increasing, research and development programme. My Department also actively promotes the wider use of combined heat and power wherever it is economic through our best practice programme.

Project management and guidance on technical aspects of these programmes is provided by the energy technology support unit at Harwell and the building research energy conservation support unit. There are no other relevant Department of Energy establishments.

Thermonuclear Fusion Reactor

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he plans to put forward at the next European ministerial Research Council on 21 December on the international thermonuclear experimental fusion reactor project.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no plans to discuss the international thermonuclear experimental reactor project at the next meeting of the European Research Council on 21 December.

Electricity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the average interruption of supply in minutes in the area of East Midlands Electricity in 1990 so far;

(2) if he will list by electricity companies all interruptions of supply involving 10,000 consumers or more occurring on or after Friday 7 December indicating the commencement and conclusions of the interruptions in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested covers matters which are the responsibility of the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he, his officials or advisers first became aware that Welsh Water was to buy, was buying or had bought shares in South Wales Electricity.

Mr. Wakeham: My officials were informed on 13 December 1990 of the purchase of a stake in South Wales Electricity plc by Welsh Water plc.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he had with the international stock exchange regarding the maximum percentage of share capital in the flotation of the regional electricity distribution companies that could be reserved for customers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's stockbroking advisers, James Capel, discussed the degree of customer preference with the interntional stock exchange before the prospectus was published.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has investigated the first two days' trading of shares in South Wales Electricity; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any proposal to debar Kleinwort Benson from acting on behalf of companies intending to acquire post-flotation stakes in the newly privatised electricity distribution companies, while it is still acting as his adviser on privatising the electricity industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am satisfied with the provisions governing conflict of interest in Kleinwort Benson Limited's contract as my adviser on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any of the firms advising him or his Department were allowed to participate in the buying or selling of the regional electricity company shares or advise or act as brokers to any third parties who did so participate.

Mr. Wakeham: In so far as the relevant firms are engaged in such business their activities are governed by provisions in their contracts concerning conflict of interest.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with Kleinwort Benson about potential conflict of interest in its advice to him on the privatisation of the electricity distribution companies and the advice it gave to other major investors on the acquisition of a stake in South Wales Electricity subsequent to its flotation on 11 December.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him today in connection with Kleinwort Benson Limited's role as my adviser on electricity privatisation. I have no reason to believe that Kleinwort Benson Limited has acted otherwise than in accordance with the terms of its contract with regard to conflict of interest.

Electricity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of applicants using (a) customer application forms and (b) public application forms were (i) unsuccessful in applying for shares in the regional electricity companies' flotation and (ii) also had their cheques cashed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Approximately 3 per cent. of people applying as customers did not receive an allocation in their supplying company. Where no allocation was made, cheques were returned without being cashed where practicable. The main case where this was not practicable was where people had made separate applications for a number of different companies on one application form. As each application has to be processed separately, no information is available as to the number of such forms which were entirely unsuccessful.

Similarly, as non-customers were able to apply for as many of the 12 regional electricity companies as they liked, no figures are available as to the number of such people who received no shares in any of the companies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation regarding mergers and takeovers involving the 12 electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department was consulted on the appointment of a firm of parliamentary consultants by the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy why he has agreed to exclude the disposal of their whole retail interests by a regional electricity company from the real estate clawback arrangements covering the disposal of other property.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 19 November at column 6.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to review the structure of the electricity distribution industry of England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no such plans.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to review the role of Kleinwort Benson as his advisers on the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I do not expect to review the role of Kleinwort Benson before the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales is complete.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding the cashing of cheques accompanying unsuccessful applications for shares in the 12 electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The share information office and my Department have received a small number of representations on the presentation of cheques for unsuccessful applications. By today a substantial proportion of those applicants who have had cheques cashed should have received returned money cheques.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on mergers, takeovers and stake-building regarding the 12 newly privatised electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on Tuesday 18 December 1990, Official Report, columns 97-98.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any of the firms advising any of the regional electricity companies were allowed to participate in the buying or selling of regional electricity company shares or advise or act as brokers to any third parties who did so participate.

Mr. Wakeham: The terms under which the regional electricity companies employed advisors for the recent flotation are matters for the companies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the amounts arising from the encashment of cheques of unsuccessful or scaled-down applications for shares in the 12 electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The total value of all cheques cashed under the United Kingdom public offer was approximately £5·3 billion. Of this approximately £4·2 billion was repaid to the public as a result of scaled-down or unsuccessful applications. The remaining £1·1 billion represents the amount paid by the public as the first instalment for the shares sold to them.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he, his officials or advisers had discussions with any retailing interests before deciding to exclude the disposal of the whole of their retail concern by a regional electricity company from the real estate clawback arrangements; and whether there have been any such discussions since.

Mr. Wakeham: Neither I nor my officials have had or are aware of any such discussions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to make an estimate, based on previous privatisations, of the proportion of the shares in each of the regional electricity companies that will be owned by the general public 12 months after flotation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the actions he has taken to date in response to the Cullen report into the Piper Alpha disaster.

Mr. Wakeham: I have secured the agreement of Cabinet colleagues with relevant responsibilities, and of the Cabinet collectively, to the acceptance of all Lord Cullen's recommendations. The detailed arrangements for the implementation of the recommendations are in hand and are being progressed as rapidly as is consistent with fully effective implementation.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the proposal for a Council decision concerning the promotion of energy efficiency in the European Community under the SAVE programme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy attended the meeting of the Council of Energy Ministers on 29 October, at which the Commission's communication on specific actions for vigorous energy efficiency was introduced, and welcomed the initiative. The proposal for a Council decision in support of the SAVE programme represents a sensible approach to the rationalisation of the European Community's work on energy efficiency, and we are working to ensure it results in effective and properly co-ordinated measures in those areas where they are appropriate.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what input he expects to make from his Department into the energy conservation and greenhouse gas limitation programme of the new global environmental facility jointly established by the World bank and the United Nations environment and development programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: I have been asked to reply and refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave today to his question to the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

General Practitioner Service

Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any plans to provide a general practitioner service for hon. Members within the Palace of Westminster during sitting hours of the House.

Mr. MacGregor: No. During its recent consideration of the future development of the Members' medical surveillance scheme, and of related proposals being considered by the Administration Committee for the introduction of a comprehensive occupational health service for staff of the House, the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee made a number of recommendations for enhancing the medical adviser's role and extending the cover provided by the nursing sister. Those resolutions were agreed by the Services Committee and are published in its Minutes of Proceedings of 24 July. The question of a general medical practitioner was considered during the course of the Sub-Committee's deliberations but was rejected on the grounds that such a service would run counter to current established procedures and would therefore not be in the best interests of Members or staff.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Managing Agents

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines he is issuing to training and enterprise councils in the quality requirements expected of training managing agents in the forthcoming competitive contracts and tenders with regard to (1) the number of monitoring visits to companies expected of such managers each year, (2) the training reviews of each trainee, (3) the off-the-job training requirements, (4) the percentage of trainees expected to reach national vocational qualifications levels 2 and 3 and (5) the staff qualifications of the training managers and their own training programme.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils agree with my Department a strategy for managing quality. This is an integral part of their corporate and business plans. These plans form the foundation of contractual arrangements between TECs and my Department. This quality strategy sets out the mechanisms the TEC will use to ensure improvements in value for money and relevance of their provision, and includes their arrangements to ensure the capability and efficiency of their training providers. As a minimum, TECs are required to maintain standards in line with the approved training organisation criteria or an equivalent locally agreed standard.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on legislation in other countries of the EEC and elsewhere that outlaws discrimination on the grounds of disability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Both France and the United States of America have recently passed laws concerned with discrimination on the grounds of disability and similar legislation already applies in Canada and parts of Australia. Some EC countries other than France have laws apparently seeking to prohibit discrimination on any grounds; others take a different approach—for example, by the use of quota systems in the area of employment.

The question of legislation is discussed in the consultative document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", issued by my Department earlier this year. The Government remain to be convinced that legislation to prohibit discrimination on the grounds of disability would be right for this country, for reasons given in the consultative document.

Skill Centres

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many skill centres have been sold; how much revenue has been obtained by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The sales of the training businesses at 51 of the 60 skill centres, the Skills Training Agency head office, mobile training service, sales teams and colleges were all completed by the 31 May 1990. The sales involved payments from the Government to the purchasers of some £14 million. the unsold skill centres have been closed and their equipment and the Department's residual property interests are being sold. This process has not been completed, so it is not yet possible to state the final proceeds of the sale.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any proportion of the proceeds of the sale of machinery and equipment from skill centres will be remitted to the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The plant and machinery from the five regional offices and nine skill centres which have not been moved to the private sector were sold by four public auctions in June and July 1990. The sales produced a total gross realisation of some £940,000 ex-VAT with further minor sales realising some £19,000. Net income to the Government totalled some £0·86 million.

Special Needs Trainees

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take action to stop training and enterprise councils requiring training managers to achieve the same level of positive outcomes for trainees who have special needs as they do for other trainees.

Mr. Jackson: It is for training and enterprise councils to negotiate appropriate targets for positive outcomes with their training managers.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many trainees with special needs were on employment training in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90; and how many he expects to be on employment training in (i) 1990-91 and (ii) 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: Employment training is aimed at long term unemployed people many of whom have special training needs. Some groups are identified separately and the table gives details of these groups as a proportion of all starts in 1988-89 and in 1989-90. No forecasts are available for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Employment training
Special needs groups as a proportion of all starts

English as a second language	1	1
People with disabilities	12	11
Literacy and numeracy training need	18	15

[1] September 1988 on.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that where training and enterprise councils award contracts to training managers for employment training without making above-average allowances for trainees' special needs the future provision for such trainees will continue to be provided.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are expected to set out in their corporate and business plans how they will make provision for trainees with special needs. TECs are responsible for deciding which training managers they should contract with.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the expenditure on (a) press advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) outdoor advertising, (d) exhibition material and (e) research for action for jobs in 1988-89 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Jackson: All the expenditure on (a) press advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) outdoor advertising and (e) research was spent through and in conjunction with the Central Office of Information for "action for jobs" in 1988-89. Expenditure for (d) exhibition material was not placed through the Central Office of Information.

Special Needs Employees

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which trainees on employment training with special needs require above-average funding.

Mr. Jackson: It is for training and enterprise councils and TEED area offices to assess appropriate funding for employment training providers, including those catering for trainees with special needs.

Full Employment UK

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations his Department has received from Full Employment UK; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Full Employment UK has made a number of representations to my Department. As with all such representations, the arguments and suggestions have been noted and considered.

Regional Policy

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations his Department has received from the Employment Institute in respect of regional policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We are aware of the recent work in this area by the Employment Institute. The arguments and suggestions in the work have been noted.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people employed in the tobacco industry in England and Wales (a) at the latest date and (b) five years ago.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is from censuses of employment The most recent figures are for September 1987. There were then 13,700 employees employed in the tobacco industry in England and Wales. This compares with a figure of 20,300 in September 1984 when the previous census of employment was taken. The figures exclude the self-employed.

Pregnant Women (EC Directive)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Royal College of Midwives and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists have been consulted about the new EC directive on the protection of pregnant women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My Department consulted over 200 organisations about the draft EC directive on the protection of pregnant women, including the Royal College of Midwives. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists was not consulted.

Training Agency Accounts

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the White Paper, "Accounts for the Training Agency for 1989-90 and 1990-91" will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Jackson: It had been planned to lay the White Paper "Accounts for the Training Agency for 1989-90" before Parliament in December 1990, but their preparation has been delayed, and they will now be published in January 1991. The Training Agency has now ceased to exist as a separate operation entirely, and no further White Paper accounts will be prepared.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting held in Brussels on 18 December.

Mr. Howard: The Council had a useful meeting.

The Council formally adopted its common position on a directive to control the use of asbestos in the workplace.

The Council reached a common position on the directive concerned with the health and safety of temporary workers, based on article 118A of the treaty. The agreement followed a compromise proposed from the United Kingdom which enabled member states who still had difficulties with the text to lift their reserves.

The Council agreed in principle a proposed decision to designate 1992 as European Year of Health and Safety. The forthcoming Luxembourg presidency was invited to make progress on this decision in the light of the awaited

Opinion of the European Parliament; and also on proposed amendments to existing regulations on social security for migrant workers and a resolution on the Commission's third action programme on equal treatment for men and women. The Council had an exchange of views on the impact of current demographic changes in the Community.

The Italian presidency sought progress on proposals from the European Commission for directives under articles 100 and 100A of the treaty, designed to regulate the rights and benefits available to part-time and temporary workers. As at the previous Social Affairs Council on 26th November, no progress was made. Many member states continued to have serious concerns about the substance of these proposals and to hold that the Commission should have based both proposals on article 100 of the treaty (requiring unanimity in the Council) because they are concerned with the interests and rights of working people.

The Council provided further vindication of the Government's approach to social affairs at Community level. The Government continue to play a full and active part so as to ensure that the United Kingdom's interests are fully represented. The Government support a social dimension to the Community, where this helps to create and sustain employment. Progress can be made when based on sensible, well prepared proposals, particularly in the field of health and safety at work. The Government will continue to give their support to measures of this kind.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Correspondence

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when he intends to reply to the letters sent to him on (a) 2 August by the hon. Member for Oldham, West regarding (i) households below average incomes and (ii) invalidity benefit claims in the north-west region, (b) 13 August regarding private residential and nursing home costs and (c) 16 October asking why he has not replied to these two earlier letters; and what are the reasons for the delay in replying;

(2) if he will now give an immediate reply to the letters of the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 2 August regarding details of the households below average incomes tables and invalidity benefit claims in the north-west region and nationally, of 13 August regarding income support levels for residential and nursing homes and 16 October asking him why he had not replied to these two earlier letters; what are the reasons for the delay in replying to these letters; and what percentage of the letters to him he does not answer within four months.

Mr. Newton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 7 December with the information he had requested on invalidity benefit figures, and also in response to a large number of queries concerning residential care and nursing homes, insofar as the relevant information was available. At the same time, I indicated that I would be writing to him separately about the other more complex information he had requested about changes in incomes. I expect to do so this week. I regret that it has not been possible to respond to all his requests as quickly as I would have wished.

State Pension Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the Government's estimate of how many people would leave the state pension scheme and at what cost; and what are the latest actual figures.

Miss Widdecombe: In his report on the financial effects of the 1986 Social Security Bill on the national insurance fund, the Government actuary said that there was no basis for making a firm estimate of the likely increase in those contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS) as the result of the provisions contained in the Bill.

The latest actual figures show that the total amount of revenue foregone in 1989-90 was £7·7 billion in respect of some 9·5 million members of contracted out occupational pension schemes in that year and some 3 million people who had taken out personal pensions in 1988-89.

Probation Service

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he received the report commissioned by the Association of Chief Officers of Probation entitled "Surviving Poverty: Probation work and benefits policy"; what response he intends to make; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The report was received in November 1989 and, in response, the Department attended a follow up conference called by the Association of Chief Officers of Probation in May. In addition, DSS matters were further reviewed when a delegation of Probation Service representatives, with the hon. Member for Macclesfield, attended a meeting chaired by the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard).

Following on from these meetings, the Department has undertaken to consider the implications for discharged prisoners over a wide range of benefit issues. There is also liaison at a local level; for example, the Leeds West office already have regular meetings with local social services and other welfare groups, including prison officers from Armley.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those parts of the United Kingdom where the temperature fell below the Department of Social Security threshold for the payment of additional allowances for heating for pensioners and others over the weekend 8 to 10 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Cold weather payments are available when the average daily temperature is 0 deg. C or below for a period of seven consecutive days. This has not yet happened this winter.

Light Bulbs

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to encourage the use of low-energy light bulbs in his Department's offices and other buildings.

Mr. Jack: A programme to replace tungsten lighting with compact fluorescent, low-energy lighting was initiated in 1989. Over 98 per cent. of the lighting used in the Department's buildings is of the fluorescent luminaire type. The Department is also committed to an intra-Government initiative seeking to reduce energy consumption on the civil estate by 15 per cent. over five years.

A demonstration project using high-frequency, low energy fluorescent luminaires with ultra-sonic controls is being developed in the Leicester Yeoman St. district office. If this is successful, all new buildings and major refurbishments will normally use this type of lighting.

Community Charge Arrears

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what outside guidance his Department has sought and obtained on the legality within the terms of the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987 of arrestments from benefits of community charge arrears currently being undertaken in Scotland.

Miss Widdecombe: Departmental officials have been in touch with their colleagues in other interested Departments including the Scottish Office.

Residential Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department pays in total to the elderly residents in private residential homes for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what are the comparable payments for the elderly in county council-owned homes.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has established a date for publication of the independent research commissioned from the social security research unit of the university of York on whether the social fund is meeting its objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 20 November 1990 at column 108.

Local Offices

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list sites under consideration for the planned Glasgow, Pollok local office; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: A site search has been commissioned by Property Holdings and the findings are likely to be known early next year. For commercial reasons the location of possible sites has to be treated as confidential at this stage.

Income Support

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons income support claimants are still receiving transitional protection.

Miss Widdecombe: There are three categories of claimants receiving income support transitional protection:

(i) Some residents of hostels as a result of benefit changes in October 1989;
(ii) Some residents of board and lodging accommodation as a result of benefit changes in April 1989;
(iii) Some former supplementary benefit claimants are receiving transitional protection as a result of the reforms in April 1988.

Special transitional additions for people with former high supplementary benefit additions for domestic assistance are uprated every year. Older and disabled pensioners on income support received a cash increase last October, through improvements to the pensioner premiums which did not erode transitional protection. In addition, increases in mobility allowance and attendance allowance are normally disregarded.

Child Poverty

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will consider the implications for matters within its responsibility of research conducted by Professor Jonathan Bradshaw of York university for publication by UNICEF into child poverty in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The report is being considered. A response will be sent to the National Children's Bureau and a copy will be sent to the hon. Member.

Pensions

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has completed his review of the disclosure requirements for occupational and personal pension schemes, including unit-linked personal pension plans; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The review has been completed and draft regulations will shortly be referred to the Occupational Pensions Board, in accordance with section 61 of the Social Security Pensions Act 1975.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reassess the criteria used to determine the level of pensions paid to category A, ADI and BL pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so.

White Finger Disease

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have submitted claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit arising out of white finger disease; how many of the claims have been successful; what amount of money has actually been paid out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available in the form requested. However, on 1 April 1989 there were some 620 assessments current for the prescribed disease vibration white finger.

Water Charges

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has completed consultations with the water industries on deductions from benefit for payment of water charges.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department and the water industries have now agreed a joint statement of intent, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. It confirms the existing arrangements whereby deductions from benefit may be made to meet water charges and so prevent disconnection of supply or court action, in the same way as already operates satisfactorily with fuel debts. This new administrative framework will come into operation on 1 January 1991.

SCOTLAND

Nurses

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden of 7 December, Official Report, column 239, who will be legally responsible for students working in the wards under the direction and supervision of registered nurses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The variety of circumstances under which Project 2000 student nurses will work is such that the question of legal responsibility for their action could only be determined by the courts in relation to individual cases.

Homosexuals

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in the Scottish Office figures for sexual offences covering each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive, how many of the (a) convictions and (b) cautions or equivalent under the categories (i) lewd and libidinous practices and (ii) procuration are accounted for by men involved in consensual homosexual behaviour with other men over the age of 16 years; and in the cases of those convicted (1) what were the charges under which they were successfully prosecuted in each case, (2) what were the 10 highest fines imposed and (3) what were the lengths of all suspended and custodial sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Full information is not available but (i) a charge of lewd and libidinous practices would not apply where there is consent and relates only to behaviour directed at children, (ii) there was no man in 1988 and one in 1989 in relation to whom the principal charge proved was procuration under section 80(9) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980; he was fined £75.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive, how many men between the ages of 16 and 21 years were (a) convicted and (b) cautioned or the equivalent for consensual offences of (i) sodomy, (ii) attempted sodomy, (iii) gross indecency in a private place and (iv) attempted gross indecency in a private place with another man between the ages of 16 and 21 years, contrary to section 80 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1989, and preceding or equivalent legislation; and in the cases of those convicted, how many were (1) fined and what were the 10 highest fines, (2) given suspended sentences and what was the length of each of these and (3) received custodial sentences and in each case what was the length of their sentenced terms of imprisonment or youth custody.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Full information is not available, but

(i) a charge of sodomy is unlikely for consensual offences; the numbers of men aged 16 to 20 in relation to whom a charge of sodomy (probably non-consensual) was proved as a principal charge were one in 1988 and two in 1989. Other than one man who was sentenced in 1989 to three years in custody no man was fined or given a custodial sentence in 1988 or 1989;

(ii) in relation to one man in the age group 16 to 20, a charge of attempted sodomy was proved as the principal charge in 1988; he was not fined or given a custodial sentence; there were none in 1989;

(iii) for no men aged 16 to 20 was a charge of gross indecency proved as the principal charge in 1988 or 1989 but the numbers in relation to whom a homosexual charge was proved under section 80(7) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 as the principal charge were six in 1988 and three in 1989. In 1988, four men were fined £50, £75, £100 and £150; in 1989, two men were fined £50 and £175. Other than one man who was sentenced in 1988 to 30 days in custody no man received a custodial sentence in 1988 or 1989;

(iv) in relation to no man aged 16 to 20 was a charge of attempted gross indecency proved as the principal charge in 1988 or 1989.

Information on the numbers of persons receiving an official warning, or on the ages of "other" men and whether they were consenting is not available. Information for the years prior to 1988 is not readily available. The figures for 1989 are provisional.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive, how many men over the age of 21 years were (a) convicted and (b) cautioned or the equivalent for consensual offences of (i) sodomy, (ii) attempted sodomy, (iii) gross indecency in a private place and (iv) attempted gross indecency in a private place with another man between the ages of 16 and 21 years contrary to section 80 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980, and preceding or equivalent legislation; and in the cases of those convicted, how many were (1) fined and what were the 10 highest fines, (2) given suspended sentences and what were the lengths of these suspended sentences in each case and (3) received custodial sentences and in each of these cases what were the lengths of the terms of imprisonment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Full information is not available, but

(i) a charge of sodomy is unlikely for consensual offences; the numbers of men aged 21 and over in relation to whom a charge of sodomy (probably non-consensual) was proved as the principal charge were six in 1988 and 11 in 1989. Custodial sentences were imposed on five men in 1988 and eight men in 1989. The durations were of 18 months, 18 months, two years, five years and seven years in 1988 and of three months, three years, three years, four years, four years, five years, five years and there was one where there is no separate duration recorded in the statistics in 1989. No men were fined in either year.

(ii) in relation to no man aged 21 or over was a charge of attempted sodomy proved as the principal charge in 1988 or 1989;

(iii) in relation to no man aged 21 or over was a charge of gross indecency proved as the principal charge in 1988 or 1989, but the numbers in relation to whom a homosexual charge was proved under section 80(7) of the Criminal Justice Act (Scotland) Act 1980 as the principal charge were 43 in 1988 and 38 in 1989. In 1988 38 men were fined, the 10 highest fines being £2,000, £300, £300, £250, £250, £250, £200, £200, £200 and £200; in 1989 31 men were fined, the 10 highest fines being £290, £250, £200, £200, £190, £150, £150, £130, £125 and £175. In 1988 three men received custodial sentences of 30 days, 30 days and four years and in 1989 one man received a custodial sentence of 60 days.

(iv) in relation to no man aged 21 or over was a charge of attempted gross indecency proved as the principal charge in 1988 or 1989.

Information on the numbers of other persons receiving an official warning, or on the ages of the "other" men and whether they were consenting, is not available. Information for the years prior to 1988 is not readily available. The figures for 1989 are provisional.

Salmon and Sea Trout

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has, from his monitoring of purse seine net fishing vessels, regarding catches of salmon and sea trout by such methods.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fishing for salmon and sea trout by purse seine net is prohibited. No information on accidental captures is available.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of all the surveys referred to in his answer of 17 December to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Lang: I shall place a list of surveys in the Library as soon as possible.

Schools

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to issue his national guidelines for staff development and appraisal in schools.

Mr. Lang: I will issue early in the new year to local authorities national guidelines for staff development and appraisal in schools for implementation over the five year period from school session 1991-92. Similar guidelines for the further education sector will follow shortly.

The guidelines have been prepared following an extensive period of consultation which demonstrated much support for the changes they will bring to Scottish education. They provide a national framework within which education authorities and schools can plan and operate systematic arrangements for the management of staff development and appraisal. They are intended to ensure an appropriate degree of consistency across the country but at the same time allow scope for variation in application to meet local circumstances.

Authorities will be invited to prepare and send to me local schemes which provide for teachers to be appraised at least once every two years so that by the end of June 1996 all teachers should have fully completed the appraisal process at least once. Authorities will be free to determine their own pace of implementation. I expect however that by the beginning of session 1994-95 at least half of the teachers within each authority should be within the appraisal process.

I have powers in the Self-Governing Schools Etc. (Scotland) Act 1989 to introduce appraisal on a statutory basis. I have concluded however as a result of views expressed during the consultation period that implementation of my policy on staff development and appraisal should be on the basis of national guidelines rather than by regulations. I will be monitoring progress on implementation and if our policy objectives are not being attained I will consider the use of regulations.

Some but not all aspects of the guidelines will bring resource implications for authorities. I have already provided cover for additional costs of £2 million in determining next year's grant settlement for authorities. Costs of £4 million will be recognised in the 1992-93 settlement. For the following years I will take into account the further costs involved depending on the progress achieved by authorities. I am also providing specific grant support for in-service training of teachers from 1991-92 to support the requirement in the guidelines for teachers to be trained before they fulfil their roles in the appraisal process. My Department is currently preparing training materials on appraisal which will become available from school session 1991-92.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take on student union issues and on safeguards for freedom of speech in higher and further education institutions in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am inviting Scottish universities and colleges of higher and further education to take part in discussions of possible action on membership and financing of local student unions and the NUS; the proper use of public funds by unions and the NUS; and also on measures to secure freedom of speech.

Following my recent consultations on the need for measures to secure free speech in Scottish institutions, I have concluded that, in view of their serious obligation to ensure free speech, universities and colleges in Scotland should be asked to introduce on a voluntary basis codes of practice to secure freedom of speech in their institutions. We shall continue to keep under review the arrangements which institutions have for securing free speech and whether any further action should be required.

Scottish Agencies

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he is taking to ensure proper representation of women on the new bodies which are to replace the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Scottish Development Agency;

(2) how many women have ever served on the boards of (a) the Highlands and Islands Development Board and (b) the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 17 December 1990]: My right hon. Friend appointed three women to the Scottish Enterprise Board and two women to the Highlands and Islands Enterprise Board. Members were appointed for their potential personal contribution and not as representatives of any organisation or group.

One woman has served on the Scottish Development Agency Board but none on the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Housing Payments

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what the cost of rent rebate expenditure was in Scotland in 1979-80; and what that cost was in 1989-90;

(2) what the cost of providing rent allowances to tenants in Scotland was in 1979-80; and what that cost was in 1989-90;

(3) how many public sector tenants in Scotland were in receipt of (a) standard housing benefit and (b) certificated housing benefit in 1989-90;

(4) how many private sector tenants in Scotland were in receipt of (a) standard housing benefit and (b) certificated housing benefit in 1989-90.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is as follows:

Number of housing benefit claimants (thousands)

	Receiving income support	Not receiving income support	Expenditure £ million
1989-90
Private tenants (rent allowances)	45	35	110
Local authority tenants (rent rebates)	270	210	360

Sources:

(a) Housing benefit management system quarterly count of claims.

(b) 1989-90 local authority subsidy claims and mid-year estimates.

The information requested for 1979-80 is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Television Licence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter of 27 November from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North regarding the television licence contract.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Soon.

Electoral Rolls

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in tabular form from highest to lowest the percentage of the population registered to vote in each constituency.

Mrs. Rumbold: Estimates of the resident population by parliamentary constituency, and hence the percentage of registered electors, are not generally available.

Mill Hill Medical Research Institute

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will list visits made by the animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate to the National Institute for Medical Research at Mill Hill since the enactment of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, with details of all identified breaches of the controls of the Act and the terms and conditions of licences issued thereunder; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In common with all other establishments, the National Institute for Medical Research is visited regularly by inspectors and most of these visits are unannounced. Since the 1986 Act came into force, visits have been made to the institute on 49 days, an average of about once a month.

All infringements are reported to the animal procedures committee, but it is not our practice to make public any details about them. It is also not our practice to give details of the terms and conditions of licences.

Prison Boards of Visitors

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum period of time a chairman of a board of visitors of a prison can hold that position; and if there are any specific guidelines.

Mrs. Rumbold: Rule 92(2) of the prison rules and rule 73(2) of the young offender institution rules provide that when a board of visitors is first constituted the Secretary of State shall appoint one of its members to be the chairman for a period not exceeding twelve months. The model constitution which the Department recommends to boards of visitors provides that a chairman should not hold office more than three consecutive years.

Pornography

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals his Department has to review and strengthen the law as it relates to the publication and circulation of pornography, with particular reference to the easing of border controls within the European Community in 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations have been made to other member states of the European Community to seek harmonisation of legislation against the publication and circulation of pornography prior to the easing of border controls in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Criminal law about pornography is a matter for each member state of the Community. The easing of frontier controls in 1992 will not require relaxation of our strict controls against obscene material. We make our views on this subject clear to other member states, with particular stress on pornography involving children. A harmonising exercise would, however, raise questions of Community competence and would not necessarily result in a common standards matching ours.

Radar Detectors

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the advertising of radar detectors for use by motorists and the use of those devices by motorists.

Mr. John Patten: The use of such equipment without a licence granted by the Secretary of State constitutes an offence under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949. It is also an offence at common law to incite another to commit a crime, whether or not the incitement is successful in persuading the person to commit the offence. The courts have held that a company which advertised a device which could detect police radar traps was properly convicted of inciting people who read the advertisement to commit an offence.

Pentobarbitone

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 475, what guidelines he issues to practitioners concerning prescription of Pentobarbitone for use by non-practitioners; and what information he collates concerning the numbers of such prescriptions.

Mr. John Patten: The use of the drug by non-practitioners is lawful only when prescribed by and used in accordance with the directions of a medical, dental or veterinary practitioner. It has not been found necessary to issue guidance additional to that contained in the product data sheets and in any literature supplied with the drug or to require central statistical returns.

Infant Life Preservation Act 1929

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the gestational age where an unborn baby is regarded as being capable of being born alive in the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The matter is being given careful consideration.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in each of the years since 1985, in England and Wales, what has been the annual rate of increase or decrease in (a) recorded sex offences, (b) the clear up rate for sex offences, (c) prosecutions for sex offences, (d) convictions for sex offences and (e) cautions for sex offences, in both (i) numerical and (ii) percentage terms; and what percentage of these increases or decreases in each of the categories (a) to (e) have involved consensual offences between men over the age of 16 years where both parties have freely participated in the acts concerned; and what categories of sex offences between men are included within these statistics.

Mr. John Patten: A homosexual act in private is not an offence where the parties consent and have attained the age of 21 years. The tables below give information on consensual acts of buggery and attempted buggery of a male of, or over, 21 with another male under the age of 21 with consent (Sexual Offences Act 1956, section 12 as amended by the Sexual Offences Act 1967, section 3(1)).

West Yorkshire Fire Service

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report into West Yorkshire fire service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is not the current practice to publish reports of inspections of fire brigades undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services. A letter summarising the conclusions reached following the inspection of the West Yorkshire fire service which was conducted in June 1990 was sent to the chairman of the West Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority on 20 July 1990.

Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for each quarter since 1 January 1989, how many asylum applications were made by nationals of Somalia (i) at British posts overseas, (ii) on entry to the United Kingdom and (iii) after entry to the United Kingdom; in each of the above categories, how many of those applications were from dependants of a principal asylum applicant or of someone granted refugee status or exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom;

(2) for each quarter since 1 January 1989, how many asylum applications were made by nationals of Sri Lanka (i) at British posts overseas, (ii) on entry to the United Kingdom and (iii) after entry to the United Kingdom; in each of the above categories, how many of those applications were from dependants of a principal asylum applicant or of someone granted refugee status or exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom;

(3) for each quarter since 1 January 1989, and by country, how many asylum applications were made (i) at British posts overseas, (ii) on entry to the United Kingdom and (iii) after entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each quarter since 1 January 1989, and by country, how many passengers were refused entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information by nationality is given in the following table:

United States Secret Service

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any special powers of arrest have been allocated to United States secret service officers stationed in, or visiting, the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has any plans to issue revised guidance to local authorities about the prosecution of those who trade illegally on Sundays;

(2) if he will make it his policy to write to those companies which have openly admitted that they are trading illegally on Sundays reminding them of the law on this matter;

(3) what information he has concerning the names of those retail traders in central London which traded illegally on Sunday 16 December; and what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that they are prosecuted.

Mrs. Rumbold: Responsibility for the enforcement of the provisions governing Sunday trading in the Shops Act 1950 is vested in local authorities, which are well aware of their responsibilities. The Government do not receive information directly about traders alleged to have broken the law in this respect.

Crime

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of crimes in each police force area in England and Wales in each of the last three years, for which figures are available (a) violence against the person, (b) burglaries, (c) theft/handling of stolen goods, (d) forgery/fraud and (e) criminal damages, including vandalism, indicating in each case (i) percentage increases for each year from 1978 and (ii) the clear up rate percentage change against 1978;

(2) what was the number of attacks against the police or police stations in Bolton in each of the last three years for which figures are available;

(3) what was the number of attacks against police or police stations in each police authority in England and Wales in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the source of press briefings to the Sunday Express on the financial arrangements for the security of Mr. Salman Rushdie.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no knowledge of the source of the press speculation on this subject. The arrangements for Mr. Rushdie's protection are a matter for the police.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each quarter since 1 January 1989, how many applicants for entry clearance for (i) settlement and (ii) temporary stay were (a) decided, (b) granted and (c) refused in each country.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Quarterly data for the Indian sub-continent and Sri Lanka are given in the table. Corresponding information for other countries is not available centrally.

Prisons

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prison places will have access to night sanitation in each of the next five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest available projections for the percentages of places which will have access to night sanitation are listed below:

	Percentage
31 March 1991	60
31 March 1992	68
31 March 1993	76
31 March 1994	82

The figures for March 1995 and beyond will depend on the resources made available in the future.

We are considering the scope for further acceleration of the programme.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prison hospital officers have a recognised nursing qualification.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 1 December 1990, about 17 per cent. were in possession of a recognised nursing qualification.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made to improve links between the prison medical service and the national health service.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Prime Minister's efficiency unit conducted recently a scrutiny of the prison medical service (PMS). Its report contains 83 detailed recommendations which, taken together, represent a radical agenda of proposed reform in how prison medical treatment is delivered. Central to the report is the recommendation that the PMS should cease to be a provider of medical treatment, and instead should purchase under contract from the NHS and elsewhere, to a greater extent than is presently the case, the various medical services required in prisons.

We welcome the prospect of developing closer links with the NHS, where practicable. To this end, we and the Department of Health are considering actively the feasibility and practicability of the scrutiny recommendations. This will take a little time as we shall need also to consult leaders of the medical profession and various other bodies.

Our immediate task is to draw up and submit to the efficiency unit by January a detailed action plan. This work is well in hand.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current rules governing prisoners' access to in-cell television; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The prison service's current policy is not to allow prisoners to have televisions in their cells. This policy is under review.

Agents Provocateurs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the steps taken to reflect in the Metropolitan police general orders the guidelines set out by the Minister of State on the use of agents provocateurs, Official Report, 14 May 1984, columns 85-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Instructions contained in the current edition of the Metropolitan police force instruction manual reflect the Home Office guidance to which the then Minister of State referred during the debate on the Police and Criminal Evidence Bill on 14 May 1984. I am advised by the Metropolitan police that a senior police officer has been tasked with looking at all force instructions relating to police operations to detect possible offences of indency to assess whether clearer guidance is required.

Firearms

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will bring into effect the provisions of section 20 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I signed a commencement order on 19 December which will bring into force on 2 April 1991 section 20 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988, insofar as it is not already in force. Section 20 is already in force for the purpose of making an order thereunder and accordingly on 19 December I also signed a Firearms (Removal to Northern Ireland) Order to come into effect on 2 April 1991.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce his decisions on police capital expenditure for 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The provision for police capital expenditure will rise from £173·7 million in the current year to £219 million in 1991-92. This is an increase of more than 25 per cent. Most of the increase will be to improve spending on vehicles and equipment.

Capital grant to meet 51 per cent. of this expenditure will be allocated to individual police authorities to meet the costs of major building schemes which are already in progress or are due to start in 1991-92. Police authorities will also receive grant on the basis of over £1,000 per head of force establishment for expenditure on minor building works, vehicles and equipment.

The amount which police authorities may borrow to meet their 49 per cent. share of capital expenditure will also be increased from £41 million in 1990-91 to £67 million in 1991-92. This is an increase of 63 per cent. and will enable police authorities to meet more than half of their costs from loans.

Police authorities are being informed of their allocations of grant and credit approvals for 1991-92.

Police Establishments

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce his decision on increases in police establishments for 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am able to approve 700 additional police posts for 1991-92 in the allocation as shown in the following table. The 100 posts for the Metropolitan police will be with effect from 31 March 1992 while the provincial force posts will be with effect from 1 October 1991. In addition I can approve up to 90 posts where I am satisfied that the full cost would be reimbursed by a third party, as in the case of some airports.

Applications from the police authorities for increases in establishments have exceeded the number of posts available for allocation and I have therefore had to set priorities taking into account advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. My approval is always subject to confirmation from the police authorities that their share of the funding is available for the extra police posts.

Over 80 per cent. of the posts will be deployed on operational duties identified by chief constables, mainly at constable level.

I have also retained 36 posts for allocation to the regional crime squads. I await the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary before I decide on their specific allocation.

In addition to police posts, provision had been made for 1,100 additional civilian staff posts which it is intended should help forces obtain police officers through civilianisation. Provincial police authorities identified scope in their applications for 1991-92 for the release of up to 630 additional police officers to operational duties by civilianisation. In addition the Metropolitan Police plans to increase operational strength by 100 through civilianisation. The full effect of the additional posts and of civilianisation could therefore be to increase operational strength by over 1,400 in 1991-92.

Mr. Mostafa Rahimi

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the circumstances of refusal of entry to Mr. Mostafa Rahimi at Heathrow airport on 6 December;

(2) if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the detention of Mr. Mostafa Rahimi in Singapore after 6 December and the discussions there have been with the Government of Singapore in respect of this case;

(3) what agreements were reached with (a) Quantas and (b) the Australian high commission immigration office prior to the placing of Mr. Mostafa Rahimi on flight QF010 on 6 December; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what representations he has (a) received from and (b) made to the Australian Government concerning the case of Mr. Mostafa Rahimi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 December 1990]: Mr. Rahimi arrived on 6 December in transit from Australia whence he was being deported to Iran by the Australian authorities, and sought asylum. The case had been the subject of an approach from the Australian immigration service. We understood from them that deportation via London was the only practicable route in the circumstances. On Mr. Rahimi's arrival in London his application for asylum was not therefore considered by the asylum division since he could be returned to Australia as a safe third country in accordance with the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 25 July 1990—a policy understood and accepted by the Australian authorities before agreement to route Mr. Rahimi through London was given. He was refused entry on 5 December under the immigration rules, and directions were give to Qantas

Airways Ltd. to return him to Melbourne. A Qantas representative gave written and oral undertakings to the immigration officer at terminal 3 that Mr. Rahimi would be removed to Australia in accordance with the directions given under the Immigration Act. An officer of the Australian High Commission in London was aware of this arrangement. When, however, the aircraft returning Mr. Rahimi to Australia arrived in Singapore I understand that he was removed from the aircraft on the direction of an official of the Australian High Commission there and subsequently removed to Iran.

We have had no discussions with the Government of Singapore. The immigration service was informed of events in Singapore by a Qantas representative and immediately informed Mr. Rahimi's solicitors. The chief inspector of the immigration service wrote to the Australian authorities seeking urgent clarification. A reply from the Australian Government has been received which states that Mr. Rahimi was removed to Iran because his application for asylum in Australia had already been fully considered and rejected.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Burslem Post Office

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations and communications he has received from the Staffordshire Evening Sentinel between 26 November and 9 December in respect of Burslem post office.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Minister for Industry has received a letter from the Editor of the Staffordshire Evening Sentinel dated 26 November setting out his objections to the proposed regrading of Burslem Crown post office and has since received several editions of the Staffordshire Evening Sentinel.

Motor Vehicle Imports

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total percentage of import penetration in the motor vehicle industry in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Leigh: Import penetration in the motor vehicles industry (SIC 351) was 48 per cent. in 1979, and 51 per cent. in the 12 months to March 1989 (the latest available period).

Motor Vehicle Production

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of all goods vehicles was produced by wholly home-owned British companies in 1979, and in the latest available year.

Mr. Leigh: The proportion, in terms of number of vehicles produced in 1989, was 3 per cent. Figures for 1979 are not available.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total annual production of heavy and light goods vehicles in Britain in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Leigh: The information is contained in the table:

United Kingdom production of goods vehicles

	Light	Heavy	Total
1979	265,734	116,795	382,529
1989	279,822	44,597	324,419

Notes:

1. Light goods vehicles are those not exceeding 3·5 tons.
2. Buses and coaches are generally excluded. However, minibuses are included in light goods vehicles in 1989.
3. Figures are as published in aggregate form by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, from data collected by the Business Statistics Office.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total production of motor cars at factories with their headquarters in the United Kingdom in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Leigh: A total of 509,000 cars in 1979, and 473,000 cars in 1989. The totals exclude United Kingdom production by manufacturers whose parent companies are based outside the United Kingdom.

Hosiery and Knitwear Imports

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total percentage of import penetration in the hosiery and knitwear industry in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Leigh: Import penetration for the hosiery and knitwear industry (SIC 4360) was 25 per cent. in 1979, and 43 per cent. for the 12 months ending March 1989 (the latest available period).

Footwear Imports

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total production of footwear in Britain in 1979 and at the latest available date; and what was the total import penetration at the same dates.

Mr. Leigh: Total production, in terms of gross output for the footwear industry (SIC 4510) was £916 million in 1979, and £1,354 million in 1988 (latest available period). Import penetration for the same periods was 34 per cent. in 1979, and 48 per cent. in 1988.

Lynx Helicopters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Lynx to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Leigh: The Department received such an application earlier this year, and I am pleased to say that approval was subsequently given.

Airbus

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Government have provided in launch aid to British Aerospace to enable it to participate in the Airbus projects.

Mr. Leigh: The sum of £50 million was made available to British Aerospace on the occasion of its entry into Airbus Industrie as a full partner in Airbus programmes in 1979. Launch aid of £249·3 million was paid in connection with the design and development of the Airbus A320.

Launch aid of up to £450 million is being paid in connection with the design and development of the Airbus A330 and A340.

Machine Tools Technology Association (Meeting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by rank and department all officials present at the meeting between the then Trade and Industry Minister, now Minister of Defence Procurement, and the Machine Tools Technology Association in early 1988.

Mr. Lilley: There were two officials with the rank of grade 7 and the Minister's assistant private secretary, all from my Department, at the meeting.

Privatisations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the privatisations with which his Department has been involved since 1979, indicating in each case the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 14 December 1990]: The information requested is given in the table.

Privatisations and sales of major subsidiaries since 1979

Science Parks

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the available EC money for the development of science parks has been taken up by appropriate bodies in Britain.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 14 December 1990]: No specific funds are available for the development of science parks under the European Community framework programme for research and development.

For the availability of funds for science parks in eligible areas under the European Community structural funds, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science on 14 December, Official Report, column 514, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment on 14 December, Official Report, column 535, and by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 17 December, Official Report, column 25.

Manufactures

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1970, in index form based on 1985, the share of world trade in manufactures from the United Kingdom, Germany, France, the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 December 1990]: The information is as follows:

Levitt Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is now taking in respect of the Levitt Group.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 December 1990]: The serious fraud office is investigating the "Levitt Group". My Department does not comment on the affairs of individual companies.

HEALTH

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the size of the hospital waiting lists in the Mid-Surrey and East Surrey area health authorities in 1980, 1985 and 1990 or latest available date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table. While numbers on the lists have gone up since 1980, the number of patients treated has also increased. This information is also provided in the table.

	1980	1985	1989-90
Mid-Surrey
Numbers on waiting list	1,905	2,153	2,031
Numbers treated	17,780	17,977	21,195
East Surrey
Numbers on waiting list	1,293	1,448	2,688
Numbers treated	19,021	22,471	25,013

Factor VIII

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider increasing HIV-AIDS funding to regional health authorities to cover the cost of high-purity factor VIII for haemophiliacs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to increase HIV-AIDS funding to the regional health authorities to take account of the prescribing of high purity factor VIII for haemophiliacs.

The haemophilia treatment centres are funded by the appropriate health authority for the treatment of haemophiliacs and high purity factor VIII is one type of treatment which clinicians may prescribe.

Residential Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will seek to introduce the same weekly payments to residents in county councils' residential homes as are currently paid to elderly residents' private residential homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As explained in our White Paper, "Caring for People", the Government wish to ensure that local authorities consider making use of the independent sector when placing people in residential settings under their community care responsibilities from April 1993.

We do not therefore propose to change the arrangements for paying social security benefits to people in local authority homes apart from personal allowances, which are to be awarded at the same rate to all residents supported from public funds in all homes, local authority, voluntary and private.

World AIDS Day

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department took to mark World AIDS Day; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: World AIDS Day, a World Health Organisation initiative, is an annual event designed to expand and strengthen the effort to prevent AIDS. The theme for this year's event was "Women and AIDS" and reflected how AIDS affects women, not only those infected with HIV, but those in society as carers, health educators and mothers.

This Department asked Margaret Jay of the National AIDS Trust (NAT) to form a group to steer the United Kingdom response, the group had representatives from the United Kingdom statutory, voluntary and media sectors. The day was marked by many events up and down the country, organised by local statutory bodies and voluntary groups. We were encouraged by the response from private firms.

On the eve of World AIDS Day, the Chief Medical Officer and I attended an ecumenical service of hope at Westminster Abbey; this was an impressive collaborative effort and a most moving tribute to those who have died as a result of AIDS and a sign of hope for the future.

On World AIDS Day Saturday 1 December we were able to talk to people in the forefront of the fight against AIDS, and speak to those caring for people with HIV infection and AIDS, and patients. We visited the Institute of Child Health and the Royal Free hospital, and the Chief Medical Officer went on to visit Mildmay Mission hospital and London Lighthouse.

We were also able, through the media, to assure people of this Government's continuing commitment to do all in our power to prevent the future spread of HIV.

Children Act

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional facilities will be provided for local authorities to ensure that the provisions of the Children Act and, in particular, those relating to guardians ad litem and childminder registration and inspection are implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Children Act will be implemented as a whole on 14 October 1991.

The cost of implementing the Act has been taken into account in the overall local authority settlement announced earlier this year. The personal social services standard spending figure for 1991-92 has been set at £4,502 million, an increase of 23·4 per cent. in cash terms over the equivalent figure for 1990-91, and some 10 per cent. higher than the local authority PSS budgets for 1990-91.

The first phase of the consultation exercise on the guidance and regulations required under the Act ended recently. The consultation papers issued as part of this exercise will form the basis of a series of booklets of guidance which will be issued free of charge to all social services departments early next year.

A number of training projects have been commissioned by the Department; included among these is a project by the National Children's Bureau, who are producing training material for staff concerned with the registration and inspection of day care facilities. We expect to commission further projects next year, including material specifically aimed at guardians ad litem.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to health authorities in London concerning their contractual arrangements for non-emergency ambulance services after 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: General advice on contracting arrangements was issued to all health authorities in March 1990 in the publication "Contracts for Health Services: Operating Contracts" a copy of which is available in the Library. Paragraphs 4.28 and 4.29 of the publications relate to ambulance services.

Doctors

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of male doctors and the number of female doctors (a) in general practice, (b) who are consultants and (c) other than consultants who work in hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of general medical practitioners hospital consultants and other hospital doctors 30 September 1990 England

Grade	Male	Female
Unrestricted principals (GPs)	19,778	5,830
Hospital consultants	12,619	2,261
Staff grade	25	8
Associated specialists	475	321
Senior registrars	2,373	916
Registrar	4,617	1,436
Senior house officers	6,802	3,823
House officers	1,682	1,262
Other staff	15	5
Hospital practitioners	762	69
Clinical assistants	5,300	2,249
Total other doctors	22,051	10,089

Food Poisoning

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give figures for the incidence of food poisoning in each local authority area in each of the last four years.

Mr. Dorrell: The information available centrally by regional health authority area was placed in the Library on 26 July 1990 following an answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) at column 438.

Erythropoietin

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the estimated number of patients who would benefit from erythropoietin.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations concerning erythropoietin.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, pursuant to his reply of 26 November, Official Report, column 296, he has received or intends to acquire, information from regional health authorities on the extent to which the extra funds provided by his Department for 1991-92 will meet the needs of all patients who fulfil his Department's criteria for benefiting from erythropoietin.

Mr. Dorrell: No. We previously discussed with regional health authorities their plans for the funding of erythropoietin. Their strategies varied but all were aware of its benefits and the need for its progressive introduction.

Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 17 December to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, if he will place the surveys listed in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not normal practice to do so. I regret that the tables supplied with my earlier reply included some social security surveys not relevant to health and personal social services. The corrected tables follow.

Disabled People

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he last issued guidance to social service authorities under section 29 of the National Assistance Act 1948, to make arrangements to make registers of people requiring assistance on account of disability etc.;

(2) if he will publish the present guidance to social service authorities under section 29 of the National Assistance Act 1948; and if he intends to revise this guidance.

Mr. Dorrell: The last guidance to local authorities on registration practice was issued in 1974 in local authority circular 17/74 a copy of which will be placed in the Library. This document has been copied to health authorities for information and wider publication is not considered necessary. We have no current plans to revise this guidance.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers of people registered under the provisions of the National Assistance Act 1948, for the social services authorities in (a) Calderdale, (b) Bradford, (c) Wakefield, (d) Kirklees, (e) Leeds, (f) Rochdale and (g) Oldham.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is published in the following triennial publications, copies of which are held in the Library:

Registers of physically disabled persons (General Classes) at 31 March 1987, England, (Ref. A/F 87/19)
Registers of blind and partially sighted persons at 31 March 1988, England, (Ref. A/F 88/7)
Registers of the deaf and hard of hearing at 31 March 1989, England, (Ref. A F 89 20)

Medical Negligence

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement providing the details of the changes which come into force on 1 January 1991 affecting the claims made against health authorities for medical negligence.

Mr. Dorrell: With effect from 1 January 1990, health authorities assumed direct responsibility, previously taken by the medical defence organisations, for claims of negligence against their medical and dental staff in the course of their national health service employment. A copy of HC(89)34, "Claims of medical negligence against NHS hospital and community doctors and dentists", has been placed in the Library. No changes come into force on 1 January 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total number of claims for medical negligence met by each region and district of the NHS in each of last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what was the total number of claims for medical negligence lodged against each region and district of the NHS in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(3) what has been the total amount of claims for medical negligence met by each region and district of the NHS in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: Until 31 December 1989, the medical defence organisations paid the costs and damages arising from claims of negligence against the medical and dental staff of health authorities. Information on the number of claims and on the costs involved is not held centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the extent to which funds are currently being diverted by health authorities from patient care towards provision for possible future claims for medical negligence.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no information which suggests that funds are being diverted in this way.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement giving details of his estimates of the likely cost of settling those claims made against the NHS for medical negligence in England and Wales which are currently being dealt with;

(2) what financial assistance he intends to give to the NHS trust hospitals to enable them to meet the potential £500 million outstanding liability for medical negligence suits.

Mr. Dorrell: The medical defence organisations paid out an estimated £40 million in the hospital and community health services in the United Kingdom in 1989. The costs in 1990-91 may be higher than this. National health service trusts will not be responsible for any act of medical negligence occurring before they were established.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions he has had with representatives of those units within the NHS which have opted for trust status about the implications for future funding of outstanding claims for medical negligence;

(2) if he will make a statement providing the details of the changes which may come into force on 1 April 1991 affecting the way in which claims made against health authorities for medical negligence will be dealt with in those cases where the health authority, or part of the health authority, has been awarded trust status.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities will remain responsible after 1 April 1991 for claims of medical negligence made against them before that date. National health service trusts will be responsible only where the negligence or alleged negligence took place after the trust became responsible for the service concerned. A copy of EL(90)195 "Insurance arrangements from April 1991" has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received concerning future plans for dealing with claims for medical negligence in the NHS.

Mr. Dorrell: The few representations received recently included one from the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts and one from Hastings health authority.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement giving details of his estimates of the likely cost of settling all currently outstanding claims and potential claims for medical negligence in the NHS.

Mr. Dorrell: No estimate has been made centrally of the likely cost of settling all currently outstanding claims: no estimate can be made of potential claims. The contingent liability is substantially larger than the amount paid out in any one year, since medical negligence cases often take several years to be settled.

Midwives

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will reconsider the recommendations of the Social Services Committee in its fourth report, 1988-89, on midwives regrading.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government gave very careful consideration to the recommendations of the Select Committee and its response was published last year (Cm. 721—June 1989).

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Institute of Manpower Studies survey entitled "Midwives Carers and Grading", printed in November.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This study was commissioned by the Royal College of Midwives, which has not sought comments from the Department.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the clinical grading structure has been applied to midwifery posts in a fair and consistent manner;

(2) what differences there are in the application of the clinical grading structure to staff midwife posts between the four Thames regions and the other regions in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The grading of individual posts is a matter for the employing authorities, who are expected to adhere to the agreed clinical grading definitions. These require posts to be graded in accordance with the particular duties and responsibilities they carry. Variations between authorities in the proportion of posts graded at particular levels may arise, for example, because of different approaches to service organisations.

Guideposts Trust

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will provide resources to the Guideposts Trust.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has received no application for a grant from the trust.

Community Nursing

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has issued any advice to health authorities on the organisation of community nursing services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 10 December I launched the report "Nursing in the Community" at a conference of senior national health service and local authority managers. This report provides practical guidance on the organisation and development of nursing services in the community. It will place nursing services in the community high on health authority management agendas, where they belong. Copies of the report have been sent to regional, district, FHSA and unit general managers, all GP practices, directors of social services, community health councils, the royal colleges and professional organisations. Copies are available in the Library.

Food Safety

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names of those invited to serve on the advisory committee and the steering group on the microbiological safety of food.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have decided that the following should be invited to be members of the advisory committee and the steering group on the microbiological safety of food.

The Gulf

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the numbers and categories of NHS staff who are being called up for military service in the Gulf; and what assessment he has made of the consequences of this call-up on the finances of the NHS, and on the quality of service and waiting lists at hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The results are not yet known of the renewed call for volunteers made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. Until it is known who has volunteered or been called out, and from where, it is not possible to make any meaningful assessment of the consequences for the national health service.

Incontinence

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly people in Leicestershire are estimated to be in need of incontinence aids; how many such people are accommodated in residential nursing homes in (a) the public and (b) the private or voluntary sector; and how many and what percentage of such persons in each sector receive such incontinence pads free of charge.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about the demand for and supply of incontinence pads is not held centrally. However, the consultation document produced by Leicestershire health authority indicates that between 400 and 500 people living in private/voluntary residential care homes may be affected by the withdrawal of free incontinence aids by the district. The district health authority have taken measures to reduce the effect on these individuals by continuing to assess the needs of individual residents and the health authority will continue to advise home owners and provide supplies at a cost price.

Mental Illness

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning recent developments in the services for mentally ill in Exeter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I visited Exeter on 23 November to open the new Cedars Health unit, a £2 million, 42-bed mental health unit.

This is one of a number of recent developments in services for the mentally ill in Exeter. These include an 18-bed child and adolescent psychiatric unit; 10 units with a total of 150 beds, for confused elderly people; and 11 hostels and sheltered housing developments with a total of 85 places in conjunction with the voluntary sector.

Eye Treatment

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether South Sefton district health authority has complied with his Department's guidelines on consultation procedures in respect of the proposed transfer of eye services to the Walton and Fazackerley hospitals;

(2) how many beds will be provided for children at the Royal Liverpool Hospital for Specialist Eye Treatments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The future of eye services in Liverpool and South Sefton, including services for children, is currently the subject of consultation by the Liverpool health authority. This is in accordance with laid down procedure. The hon. Member may wish to contact the health authority chairmen concerned for details.

HIV Tests

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with insurance companies about arrangements for counselling before a test for HIV is undertaken at a company's request.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 19 December at column 243.

Therapy Officers

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received the report of the review of the functions of his Department's therapy officer posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have now received and considered the report and arranged for copies to be placed in the library. Mr. John Cashman has earned our gratitude for the fair and thorough way in which he has carried out his task. The Department will be giving the departmental staff side the opportunity to comment on the recommendations and on the action proposed.

At the outset, the report commends the present holders of therapy posts in the Department for their commitment, dedication, wide ranging experience and professionalism. We are happy to endorse those comments.

The report's main recommendation is that the department should continue to have an establishment of full-time therapy officers. This should comprise one full-time post each for physiotherapy, occupational therapy and speech therapy. We accept this recommendation. Future appointments to these three posts will be made for periods of five years and the need for the posts will be kept under review.

The report acknowledges that the department may require additional advice on therapy services which could be met through consultancy contracts or short-term secondments related to specific projects. The case for buying in services in this way will be considered on an annual basis.

A number of other recommendations are aimed at bringing the therapy officers more closely within the mainstream of the Department's management and budgetary arrangements. These will be put into effect as soon as practicable.

Drugs Bill

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate of the drugs bill in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our latest forecast of the cost of drugs prescribed by general practitioners in 1990-91 is some £200 million less than provided in the Estimates. This is forecast to give 1 per cent. growth in real terms over 1989-90, compared with an average of 4 per cent. a year in the five years from 1985-86 to 1989-90, and reflects the effectiveness of the prescribing analysis and cost (PACT) initiative in influencing prescribing by GPs. The forecast drugs bill for 1991-92 in our public expenditure plans is £2,310 millions, an increase of 3 per cent. in real terms over the forecast outturn for this year.

Nurse Training

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the joint working group on nurse training and the independent care sector will publish its report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1987 the then Chief Executive of the National Health Service Management Board and the Chief Nursing Officer of the Department of Health met with senior representatives of the independent health care sector to review the sector's contribution to nurse training. It was agreed that a joint working group should be established in order to identify the extent of the independent sector's capacity to increase its contribution to nurse training.

I have today arranged for copies of the group's report, "Training to Care" to be placed in the Library. The principal achievement is a clear commitment from private sector major providers and organisations representing the independent health care sector to increase their overall contribution to nurse training. This encouraging first step will be followed-up by discussion between representatives of the independent sector and the NHS management executive to explore ways of putting that commitment into practice.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shipbuilding

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the amount of merchant ship tonnage in British yards (a) under construction and (b) already ordered, in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Leigh: The information is as follows:

	Under construction	thousand gross tonnes already ordered
1979	508	264
[1]1990	275	387

[1]End of 3rd quarter.
Source: Department of Trade and Industry.

NATO Central Supplies Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department's arrangements for housing the NATO central supplies agency have been completed; and what is the estimated cost of setting up, activating and operating the United Kingdom base for the central supplies agency.

Mr. Leigh: A site has been identified for the location of the eastern branch of the NATO Central Supplies Agency. this site is presently occupied by a civilian organisation which will give it up on short notice if it is required to house the CSA during crisis or war. Until the site is required to house the CSA, the peacetime occupier will bear the rental and maintenance costs. It is not possible to say at this time what the costs of setting up and operating the agency in crisis or war might be. The cost of operating the agency in such cirmcumstances would fall to NATO.

Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will order an investigation into whether the practices of large bookmaking companies include the rigging or fixing of odds on United Kingdom racecourses and tracks.

Mr. Redwood: The practice of "laying-off" of bets is not illegal under the gaming legislation. During its investigation of the Grand Metropolitan/William Hill merger in 1989, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission looked at the practice in this context. They found that there was little evidence that the bookmakers had acted other than defensively in laying-off bets, in order that the odds should reflect the weight of money placed off-course. It therefore concluded that the merger did not operate against the public interest. In the light of the Channel 4 programme "Dispatches" shown on 12 December, the Office of Fair Trading is considering whether any new issues are raised which warrant further action.

Export Manual

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the most recent date on which his Department's export licence unit manual of instructions was revised, in particular in respect of the export of strategic materials and weaponry.

Mr. Lilley: The manual is amended on a continuous basis in the light of changing circumstances.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government about the tax discrimination made by the Chilean Government against Scotch whisky.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government are continuing to press for elimination of the tax discrimination against exports of Scotch whisky to Chile both on its bilateral contacts with the Chilean authorities and through the Commission of the European Communities.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take steps to expedite the publication of his Department's annual report under section 729 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: The most recent report was published on 7 November 1990. The publication date is determined mainly by the time needed to compile the comprehensive statistical information contained in the report. It is always published as soon as possible after the material is available.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy relating to accountancy firm mergers.

Mr. Redwood: The Government's policy on mergers in the accountancy profession is the same as for any other mergers. Each case is considered on its individual merits.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any of Britain's top 300 companies are audited by firms criticised by his Department's inspectors.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 26 October 1990 Official Report, column 330.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which company auditors would be banned from recruiting directors of their client companies.

Mr. Redwood: I see no reason to do so. Ethical guidance issued by the professional accountancy bodies states that no one should take part in the audit of a company if he has, during the period on which the report is to be made or at any time in the two years prior to the first day of that period, been an officer, other than auditor, or employee of that company. Under part II of the Companies Act 1989, recognised supervisory bodies are required to have adequate rules and practices as to professional integrity and independence.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which shareholders would be given a copy of the auditors' letter of weakness.

Mr. Redwood: No. The value of a letter of weakness stems from the fact that it is a confidential communication from the auditors to the management of a company. It must be for management, in consultation with the auditors, to decide which third parties, if any, need to be aware of its contents.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the accountants criticised in the Euroflame report are still permitted to carry out company audits.

Mr. Redwood: Yes.

Trading Standards Prosecutions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many trading standards prosecutions were brought in 1990 by each local authority to whom such prosecutions are delegated, whether he is satisfied that similar standards of inspection and prosecution are being applied nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The table gives the numbers of prosecutions brought by local authority trading standards departments in Great Britain in the year 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990. This is the latest period for which such information is available. Each local weights and measures authority is responsible for enforcing trading standards legislation in its area. The local authority associations have set up the Local Authority Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards whose functions include co-ordinating operational practice.

Car Clocking

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any proposals to reduce the danger of purchasers being defrauded by the practice of car clocking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Clocking is a criminal offence under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. Trading standards officers of local authorities have the appropriate powers to investigate cases and to prosecute offenders.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the precise purpose for which the machine tools to be exported by Matrix Churchill were to be used according to form C5 filled in by the exporter.

Mr. Lilley: I believe that the hon. Member is referring to information requested at C6 of the export licence application form. It had been the practice of successive Governments not to discuss information concerning individual export licences.

Levitt Group

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the services which his Department has purchased from the Levitt Group.

Mr. Redwood: I am aware of none.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will place a copy of the FIMBRA report on the Levitt Group in the Library.

Mr. Redwood: No. The report is a matter for FIMBRA.

Sequestration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the findings of the recent investigation into the operation of the scheme introduced by the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 whereby public funds are available for sequestration in Scotland; and what reform of the scheme is proposed.

Mr. Redwood: The policy evaluation is not yet complete.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for each year since inception, what was the number of sequestrations awarded under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 where the total debts have not exceeded £2,000.

Mr. Redwood: Comprehensive statistics are not available but the accountant in bankruptcy estimates, on the basis of a sampling exercise, that the percentage of sequestrations awarded annually where the total debts did not exceed £2,000 were as follows:

	per cent.
1986	2·9
1987	1·2
1988	2·8
1989	6·9

The figure for 1989 is based on the information available on the total debts when the sampling exercise was undertaken and is provisional.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in cases of voluntary sequestration or sequestration, pursuant to a trust deed under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985, what monitoring is applied to identify the payer of the pre-sequestration expenses such as legal fees and out-lays in connection with the petition; and what steps are taken to establish whether these expenses are paid by the trustee subsequently appointed or by a partner of the trustee or anyone associated with the trustee.

Mr. Redwood: A trust deed is an entirely private arrangement between truster and trustee and is not subject to supervision by the court. There is no provision in the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 requiring or empowering the accountant in bankruptcy to identify the source of payment of pre-sequestration expenses.

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries with whom he has had discussions about their export of uranium enrichment centrifuge or military sensitive equipment to Iraq.

Mr. Lilley: No. The export of such goods would require an export licence. The established practice is not to publish information about export licence applications.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the Export Credits Guarantee Department's portfolio management system.

Mr. Lilley: In his answer of 18 December 1989 to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart), my predecessor announced that the Government had decided that ECGD should continue to provide export credit and financing support for United Kingdom project exports, but that, in order to reduce the costs of such support, radical new methods for the management of ECGD's political risk portfolio would be introduced.

The Government continue to attach great importance to United Kingdom project and capital goods exports and to maintaining a viable and stable framework of ECGD support. However, the international debt crisis, and more recently the events in the Gulf, have shown the risks which are assumed by ECGD to be potentially very significant. Since the onset of the debt crisis ECGD has accumulated a deficit with the Exchequer of over £2·5 billion as a result of claims paid under its guarantees. This deficit has had to be financed by the taxpayer, and further substantial claims payments estimated at around £2·5 billion are expected over the next few years. It is important that future risks are underwritten on a prudent basis.

Against this background, the ECGD has now introduced a portfolio management system—PMS—for its underwriting of project and capital goods exports. The purpose of PMS is to provide a more disciplined and prudent framework for taking decisions about ECGD support for such exports. PMS will allow Ministers better to weigh the national interest reasons for giving such support against the risks to the ECGD and the taxpayer that premium income will not be able to cover underwriting losses.

With regard to PMS, the Government have now taken decisions on the availability of ECGD cover for a number of important overseas markets. It is not the ECGD's policy to disclose details of the amount of cover available for individual markets; exporters should contact the ECGD to ascertain the cover position in respect of contracts they are currently processing.

Under PMS, the ECGD will also be introducing a new premium rating system for its guarantees in respect of project exports. The Government intend to press in international fora for other export credit agencies to charge more economic premium rates for export credit support, but, in the meantime, ECGD will be adopting new premium rates which will be matched more closely to risk. This will mean that rates for higher risk markets will rise, but there will be some reductions in the better risk markets. The new premium system will be introduced in 1991-92. Export contracts which are concluded in 1990-91 will attract premium rates under the current system. The ECGD will announce details of the new system in due course.

Environmental Management Practice

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place between his Department and the British Standards Institute over the development by the British Standards Institute of a new standard on environmental management practice in production industry.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 December 1990]: My officials have had general discussions with a number of organisations, including the British Standards Institute, about possible approaches to encouraging improved standards of environmental management by companies.

Cereal Exports

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice he will give Grain and Feed Trade Association members regarding the provision of credit facilities for United Kingdom cereal exports to non EC countries in the light of the recent Russian decision not to trade unless credit facilities are made available.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply. In response to the credit needs of the Soviet Union, the European Council has agreed to introduce credit guarantees for Community exporters of food to that market. The details of the guarantees have yet to be worked out but they may be available to cereal exporters. For other non-EC markets, United Kingdom cereal exporters who need credit facilities may wish to seek them from banks or from the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

ERM

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will make a statement setting out the arrangements for a realignment of sterling within the ERM; and if this is a decision which the United Kingdom can make alone.

Mr. Maples: Adjustments to central rates between ERM member currencies are subject to mutual agreement by a common procedure which comprises all countries participating in the ERM. Any member state wishing to propose a realignment may do so. If necessary, a conference of finance Ministers, and Central Bank governors is held to consider any proposed realignment. The United Kingdom has no intention of seeking a realignment of sterling within the ERM.

ENERGY

National Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what representations he has had from the chairman of National Power regarding its future levels of capital investment and its preferred financing methods for that capital investment;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of National Power regarding the proposed debt level to be injected into its balance sheet; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has had from the chairman of National Power regarding the expected level of profits to be declared for the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Consultations with the chairman of National Power are confidential.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of applications for each of the 12 regional electricity companies that were made on (a) employee forms and (b) pensioner priority forms.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The numbers of applications for shares in the 12 regional electricity companies made on (a) employee forms and (b) pensioner priority forms are as set out in the table. A number of employees were eligible for and applied under both the discount and priority offer and the free and matching offer.

These figures exclude 10,639 applications from employees of NGC and EASL for collections of shares.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to seek a further reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions during negotiations on the new European protocol.

Mr. Moynihan: The United Kingdom will play a positive part in the current discussions on the revision of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe protocol of sulphur dioxide emissions. All sources of sulphur dioxide emissions will be covered in the negotiations including those not already subject to separate ceilings. It is the Government's view that the new agreement should be based on the critical loads approach. It is too early to predict the outcome of these discussions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Birmingham Pub Bombings

32. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects a date to be set for the appeal of the Birmingham Six; and if he will make a statement.

34. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects a date to be set for the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

36. Ms. Short: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects a date to be set for the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer to my earlier answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin).

Private Bailiffs

33. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received calling for the establishment of a complaints procedure against private bailiffs.

The Attorney-General: The National Consumer Council has recently published a report which recommends that the Lord Chancellor's Department should advertise a central address and telephone number to receive complaints against private bailiffs. The Government are considering the recommendations of this report.

Racist and Anti-Semitic Literature

35. Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the prosecution of persons sending racist and anti-Semitic literature through the post.

The Attorney-General: Such people may commit offences under part III of the Public Order Act 1986, or under the Malicious Communications Act 1988. I am aware of 16 separate police investigations arising out of the distribution of allegedly anti-Semitic material through the post.

CPS and Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General how many vacancies for professionally qualified staff exist currently in (a) the Crown prosecution service and (b) the Serious Fraud Office; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service currently has 366·5 vacancies for lawyers, within a total requirement for lawyers of 2,053. In the past 12 months the number of lawyers in post has increased from 1,580 to 1,686·5, an average net gain of 10·5 per month. There are no vacancies for lawyers or accountants in the Serious Fraud Office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Vietnam

39. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will increase aid to Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government are providing financial support to British non-governmental organisations for projects in Vietnam. We have no immediate plans to begin a direct aid programme, but we are keeping this question under review.

Zaire Rain Forests

41. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much support has been given to preserving the rain forests of Zaire (a) in the last year, (b) five years ago and (c) 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Our technical co-operation programme for Zaire is limited to training and assistance for English language teaching. But European Community commitments to forestry between 1987 and 1989 amounted to £10·7 million, and our share of these came to about £1·8 million.

India

42. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding United Kingdom aid to India.

Mrs. Chalker: Aid to India continues to be the largest British bilateral aid programme amounting to over £500 million in the last five years.

Sudan and Ethiopia

43. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what prospects Her Majesty's Government see of relieving the threat of famine in Sudan and Ethiopia.

44. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what prospects the Overseas Development Administration sees of relieving the threat of famine for the people of Sudan and Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: As I told the House on 19 December, effective relief machinery is in place in Ethiopia. Massawa port is open. Government and rebel groups are co-operating on relief. If this holds and the international community gives generously, we may be able to avert the worst effects of famine.

The outlook for Sudan is very much worse. Given the scale of the crisis and the lack of Sudanese Government co-operation, it is hard to help, but we shall do what we can to alleviate hardship.

Brazil

45. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made on bilateral aid agreements with Brazil on environmental matters.

Mrs. Chalker: We have agreed four projects at a total cost to Her Majesty's Government of £4·6 million. All four are now under way. We expect to approve shortly a further four projects costing £4 million. A number of other project proposals are under discussion and awaiting the approval of the Brazilian authorities.

Third World Debt

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has put forward any proposals to the World Bank to reduce the burden of debt on third world countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain has taken the lead in international efforts to provide debt relief for the poorest and most heavily indebted countries. In Trinidad last September, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, put forward proposals for increasing the relief available under earlier schemes. He proposed a reduction of two thirds in the official bilateral debt of eligible countries, with the remainder rescheduled over 25 years.

Tied Aid

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors underlie the difference between the figure given by the Minister for Overseas Development, concerning the percentage of British aid that is tied, Official Report, 14 December, column 1298, and the figures for united British aid on table 32, page 220, of the OECD's 1990 report "Development and Co-operation".

Mrs. Chalker: The figure I gave in the House was based on gross public expenditure on overseas bilateral aid in 1989. The figure in the OECD report is based on new commitments of bilateral official development assistance in 1988. The two figures thus relate to different years and to different measures of aid flows.

Rihand Power Station

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the offer of aid and trade provision aid to support phase 2 of the Rihand power station in India has expired; and whether it will be renewed.

Mrs. Chalker: An offer of aid for stage II of the Rihand power station in India was made on 23 September 1988 subject to appraisal and approval of the project by the Overseas Development Administration. In subsequent exchanges with the Government of India, we have confirmed our interest and emphasised that approval of any aid funding would be subject to our satisfaction with the environmental, technical, financial and economic aspects of the project.

Development Assistance

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will show, in table form (a) the level of United Kingdom official development assistance in 1979 and 1989, in current and in constant 1989 prices, (b) the size of the aid budget in 1979, and 1990, in current and in constant 1990 prices and (c) the total gross public expenditure on overseas aid in 1979 and 1989 in current and in constant 1989 prices in all cases showing the percentage change.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

	1979 £ million	1989 £ million	Percentage change on 1979
1. Net Official Development Assistance
Current prices	1,016	1,578	+55·3

2. Net Aid Programme

Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Brazilian Amazon

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid money or other support has been given to the Indian co-ordinating group, CIOCA, in the Brazilian Amazon.

Mrs. Chalker: We are not aware of the organisation referred to by the hon. Member.

Aid Grants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many grants of less than £500,000 have been paid or allocated from the aid programme in 1989 and 1990; how many grants of less than £100,000 have been paid or allocated from the aid programme in 1989 and 1990; and how many of these have been for projects in the Amazon region.

Mrs. Chalker: Information is not available in the form requested by the hon. Lady. The relevant information that is readily available is as follows:

Forty-nine new financial aid commitments of less than £500,000 were made in 1989—comparable information for 1990 is not yet available—of which 19 were less than £100,000. None was for the Amazon region. Technical co-operation projects and projects under the joint funding scheme are not included in these totals; but all technical co-operation projects in that region so far entered into during 1990 under the memorandum of understanding with the Brazilian Government are in excess of £500,000.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on guarantees on European investment bank lending entered into under the Lomé conventions and on the procedures for notifying Parliament of these guarantees.

Mrs. Chalker: I have today laid before the House a minute giving details of such guarantees, and the procedure for notifying Parliament of them in the future. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

ISIS and the Institut Laue-Langevin

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's contribution to (a) the ISIS particle accelerator and (b) the Institut Laue-Langevin at Grenoble.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In the financial year 1990-91, the United Kingdom will contribute £10·4 million to ISIS, and £9·9 million to the Institut Laue-Langevin.

Adult Relationships

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision is made within the core curriculum for preparation for marriage and adult relationships.

Mr. Atkins: Within the core curriculum, the national curriculum science order requires that pupils should know about the physical and emotional changes during adolescence and understand the need for responsible attitudes to sexual behaviour; the processes of human conception; and the factors necessary for the well-being of young children in the early stages of their development. More broadly, the National Curriculum Council has offered guidance to schools on the incorporation of such topics into the curriculum in its publications on cross-curricular themes: "Curriculum Guidance 5: Health Education" and "Curriculum Guidance 8: Education for Citizenship".

Marriage Guidance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to increase the tuition on marriage guidance counselling included in medical training courses.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The content of the undergraduate medical curriculum is a matter for individual institutions in the light of recommendations from the education committee of the General Medical Council.

Bedfordshire Schools

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total amount of moneys that his Department is allocating to Bedfordshire county council for the maintenance and repair of school buildings for the year 1991-92; what is the amount allocated in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Bedfordshire local education authority is to receive an annual capital guideline of £1·974 million in 1991-92, of which £1·833 million is related to schools, and an allocation of £0·6 million for projects at voluntary aided and special agreement schools. In the current year, Bedfordshire has received an ACG of £2·409 million—£2·309 million is related to schools—and an allocation for VA and SA schools of £15,000. The authority can also use capital receipts and other sources such of funding, including its revenue budget, to support capital expenditure. However, the Government do not allocate to LEAs separately identified recurrent funds for repairs and maintenance: it is for each authority, and, under local management, its schools, to determine what proportion of the total recurrent funds available to them to allocate for that purpose.

Rural Schools Project

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the funding of the rural schools project.

Mr. Fallon: Since 1985 the Government have supported through education support grant expenditure totalling about £7·5 million on projects to improve the range and quality of the curriculum in rural schools in 14 local education authorities. In common with all education support grant programmes, support is limited to a finite period for these pilot projects. Support in 13 of the 14 local education authorities will have ceased by the end of the 1990-91 financial year. Because of a later start, support for Northumberland LEA will end in 1991-92. The programme is being evaluated by Leicester university with the aim of issuing to LEAs a report with recommendations by the end of this year.

Soccer Commissioner

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to establish an independent soccer commissioner to oversee the workings of the existing football authorities.

Mr. Atkins: The administration of association football is a matter for the football authorities.

Nottinghamshire County Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional (a) loan sanction and (b) grant has been granted to Nottinghamshire county council for education purposes for the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The annual capital guideline for education for Nottinghamshire in 1991-92 is £5·167 million. The authority's credit approval, which sets the limit for its borrowing for the year, is calculated for all services and is £15·891 million. The proposed revenue support grant for the charging authorities within the area of the authority for 1991-92 is £146·8 million. As this is paid in support of all services, it is not possible to specify how much supports education expenditure. In addition to this general support, over £7 million of Nottinghamshire's education expenditure is to be supported through specific grants from the programme of grants for education support and training.

Youth Service

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on the latest available figures, if he will set out for each local education authority (a) the level of expenditure on the youth service and (b) the standard spending assessment for the youth service.

Mr. Atkins: The latest year for which outturn expenditure is available is 1988-89. Table 1 shows the actual recurrent expenditure of each local education authority on youth and community services in 1988-89, with the exception of three authorities which failed to make a return. The standard spending assessment does not include a block of expenditure dedicated to the youth service alone, but makes allowance for this expenditure within the "other education services" block, which also allows for adult education. Table 2 shows the amount for each local education authority of the "other education services" block of the standard spending assessment for 1990-91.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has made any assessment of the likely administrative costs for individual local education authorities arising out of schools achieving grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: LEAs should be able to make savings on administration where schools become grant-maintained. The overall effect on the expenditure of the authority will depend on the extent to which they make such savings.

Youth Work

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out, at 1990 prices, the level of support for voluntary organisations involved in youth work for 1987-88, 1988-89, 1089-90, and 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is given in the table.

Iraqi Students

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students from Iraq attended postgraduate courses at British universities and colleges of higher education in each of the years 1981 to 1990 inclusive.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of students from Iraq enrolled on post-graduate courses at British higher education institutions between 1980-81 and 1989-90 are as follows:

Geography

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish for consultation the draft order with attainment targets and programmes of study for geography in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today published for consultation a draft order with an associated document setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for geography in the national curriculum for pupils aged five to 16, as I am required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act 1988. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft order has been prepared following advice to me from the National Curriculum Council, in the light of its consultations on the proposals made by the former holder of my office and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. I am most grateful to the council for its advice.

I have accepted the bulk of the council's recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study as a basis for further consultation. The National Curriculum Council has recommended one major change to the structure of attainment targets in geography, reducing the total number of attainment targets from seven to five. I have accepted this change and believe that it will be helpful in reducing the assessment load on teachers.

However, I consider that the attainment targets should emphasise more strongly knowledge and understanding of aspects of geography and put less emphasis on assessment of skills which, however desirable, are not particular to geography, and less emphasis on the assessment of pupils' exploration of attitudes and values. I also consider that, for primary schools, the number of different places to be studied should be smaller than in the recommendations made to me. I have also made other minor changes to the Council's recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study. Therefore, in accordance with section 20(5)(a)(ii) of the Education Reform Act 1988, I have published a statement of my reasons for departing from the council's advice. Copies have been placed in the Library, with the draft order.

The draft order and documents do not provide for a short course for pupils at key stage 4 who are not taking a geography GCSE. The National Curriculum Council has advised me on this, but I have decided to consider this advice further, particularly with a view to securing maximum flexibility for schools in determining the nature of such short courses. However, it remains my intention that there should be provision within the national curriculum for pupils at key stage 4 to take short geography courses and I shall in due course bring forward a further draft order accordingly.

The draft order for geography sets out a range of essential geographical skills; maintains the emphasis on pupils' knowledge and understanding about places which was a central feature of the proposals issued in June; and ensures that study of the environment remains central to the geography curriculum along with the study of physical and human geography.

The period for consultation on the draft order will end on 15 February 1991. I intend to make the final order in March 1991 in good time for schools to begin teaching national curriculum geography to pupils aged five, seven and 11 from the following autumn. The draft order applies only to England. My right hon. Friend will be publishing separately for consultation a draft order for geography in Wales.

History

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish for consultation the draft order with attainment targets and programmes of study for history in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today published for consultation a draft order with an associated document setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for history in the National Curriculum for pupils aged five to 16, as I am required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act 1988. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft order has been prepared on the basis of advice from the National Curriculum Council following consultation on the proposals made in July by the former holder of my office. The council's advice on attainment targets and programmes of study responds to a number of proposals and requests made by my predecessor. In the light of that advice, the proposed number of attainment targets has been reduced from four to three. The programmes of study are now set out in a simpler format, and are less detailed and prescriptive. The proposed core course of study for pupils aged 14 to 16 has also been redesigned by the NCC, along the lines indicated by my predecessor.

I have made certain further changes, as explained in the letter to those being consulted, to make it clear that the focus of study of this unit should be the first half of the twentieth century. I believe that it is right to draw some distinction between the study of history and the study of current affairs.

The curriculum requirements I am now proposing in this final stage of consultation will provide a sound basis for the acquisition of knowledge and understanding of British, European and world history. The attainment targets will ensure that knowledge, understanding and skills are rigorously assessed. The programmes of study will provide a clear framework of historical content to be taught while leaving teachers a degree of freedom in the design of schemes of work. I believe that this represents the successful outcome of a long period of consultation and public debate.

The period of consultation on the draft order will end on 15 February 1991. I intend to make the final order in March 1991 in good time for the schools to begin teaching national curriculum history to pupils aged five, seven and 11 from the following autumn.

The draft order applies only to England. My right hon. Friend will be publishing separately for consultation a draft order for history in Wales.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the research establishments and projects respectively which have been granted moneys from the Agricultural and Food Research Council; and if he will list the amounts involved.

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 20 December 1990]: The research institutes that have received grants from the AFRC to meet recurrent and capital expenditure in the year to 31 March 1991 are as follows, the amount of the grants also being shown:

The AFRC currently makes approximately 1,069 research grants to some 64 higher education institutions, totalling approximately £52 million, of which about £15 million is allocated per annum. Full details are given in a detailed print out which I am sending to the hon. Member. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Further information relating to projects undertaken in AFRC institutes and higher education institutions supported by AFRC is included in the AFRC handbook 1990, copies of which have also been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Traffic Fines

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his intention to allow London borough councils to retain fine income from local road traffic offences to pay for improvements in road traffic schemes in their areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Revenue from fines for road traffic offences, like the revenue from other criminal penalties, is paid into the Consolidated Fund. However, the Road Traffic Bill provides that contravention of certain orders relating to parking places in London should no longer be a criminal offence and that local authorities should assume responsibility for enforcing these parking controls. Under the Bill, local authorities would retain income collected by way of penalty charges for infringements and would be able to use it for specified parking and traffic related purposes.

Magistrates Courts (Staff)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to extend the remit of the Parliamentary Commission for Administration to include investigation of complaints against magistrates courts staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have not yet reached decisions on the future organisation of the service in the light of the report of the magistrates' courts scrutiny. It would not be sensible to consider the remit of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in relation to magistrates courts service staff separately from the broader organisation issues.

Taylor Report

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has immediate plans to implement the Taylor report; and if he has discussed with the Football League and Football Association the effects arising from the non-implementation of the report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Lord Justice Taylor's final report on the Hillsborough stadium disaster made 76 specific recommendations, the great majority of which have now been implemented by the responsible authorities.

We have made it clear that the primary responsibility for the reduction of standing accommodation at football league grounds in accordance with the timetable proposed by Lord Justice Taylor rests with the clubs themselves. We have also indicated to the Football League and to the Football Association that we are prepared to accept variations from the interim timetable recommended by Lord Justice Taylor provided that there is realistic progress towards the dates by which the use of standing accommodation should be discontinued. We shall look to the Football Licensing Authority to advise us, in due course, whether progress towards all seated accommodation is satisfactory. The football authorities are well aware that enforcement powers are available, if it is not.

Mr. R. Jerrard

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the entitlement of Mr. R. Jerrard of Warwick for a long service and good conduct medal as an inspector in the City of London police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The royal warrant which instituted the long service and good conduct medal offers no scope for discretion to award the medal to anyone who has served less than 22 years police service.

Overseas Electors

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, on Tuesday 18 December, Official Report, columns 102-3, if he will now give the total number of overseas electors included in the 1991-92 register published by individual electoral registration officers on 28 November, together with numbers for each constituency and for each region of Scotland and county in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on the number of overseas electors included in the draft electoral register is still being collated. We shall shortly make the figures known to the House.

Community Charge

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of people in each of the 32 London boroughs who have been summonsed for the non-payment of the community charge.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally on the number of people in each London borough who have been summonsed for non-payment of the community charge. However, the table shows the number of summonses heard at magistrates courts in the London area from April to September 1990, the latest date for which the information is available.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of people who have been sentenced to a period of imprisonment by courts covering the Greater London area who have been summonsed for the non-payment of their community charge.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information for 1990 is not yet available.

Police Training

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training has been given by United Kingdom police officers to police officers in the Punjab region of India in the last five years to date; what training has been received by police officers from the Punjab in the United Kingdom over the same period; what was the nature of such training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no central record of any training having been given by United Kingdom police officers to police officers in India in the last five years.

Central records, which do not distinguish between officers from the Punjab and those from other parts of India, show that the following visits were made by Indian police officers to the United Kingdom for training purposes over this period.

1986

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss its organisation and structure.

1987

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss training.

Two officers visited the Metropolitan Police, Ashford Police Training Centre and the Police Staff College, Bramshill.

One officer was attached to the Metropolitan Police and the Police Staff College to study training management.

1988

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police and the Police Staff College to discuss training.

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss the day-to-day operation of a police station.

One officer visited the Home Office, Metropolitan and West Midlands Police to discuss counter-terrorism.

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss the ability of the police to handle new problems.

1989

Two officers undertook a training attachment with the Police Staff College, and the West Yorkshire and Metropolitan Police forces.

Four officers visited the Metropolitan Police CID Training School at Hendon.

Two officers visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss VIP security.

Four officers undertook a Criminal Records Computerisation Course at Merseyside and subsequent attachment to the Police National Computer Organisation.

One officer visited the Police Staff College, Metropolitan Police, Lancashire Constabulary, Kent Constabulary and West Yorkshire Police to discuss recruitment, training, promotion, computers, drugs and terrorism.

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss training methods and courses.

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss the ways in which the police assist the courts.

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police and Ashford Police Training Centre to discuss anti-terrorist and general police training.

One officer attended the Overseas Command Course, Police Staff College, Bramshill.

In addition, in each of the last five years, 10 officers from the Indian police service have attended a specially designed overseas command course at West Yorkshire police force training school.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training has been given by United Kingdom police officers to police officers in Sri Lanka in the last five years to date; what training has been received by Sri Lankan police officers in the United Kingdom over the same period; what was the nature of such training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no central record of any training having been given by United Kingdom police officers to police officers in Sri Lanka in the last five years, although a detective inspector from the Metropolitan police went to Sri Lanka in 1987 for a short advisory visit.

Central records show that the following visits were made by Sri Lankan police officers to the United Kingdom for training purposes over this period.

1986

Two officers attended the Overseas Command Course at the Police Staff College, Bramshill.

1987

None.

1988

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss drugs and new methods of fighting crime.

One officer attended a traffic management course with Lancashire Constabulary and the Metropolitan Police.

Two officers were attached to the Metropolitan Police to discuss VIP security.

1989

One officer visited the Home Office to discuss the right to silence.

One officer visited the Police Staff College, Bramshill, to discuss police training.

One officer visited the Metropolitan Police to discuss taxi licensing.

Two officers visited the Home Office, Metropolitan and Essex Police forces to discuss computers in police work.

Two officers attended the Overseas Command Course, Police Staff College, Bramshill.

One officer attended a VIP Security Course at Lancashire Constabulary.

One officer attended the Overseas Command Course, Police Staff College, Bramshill.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he now proposes to take to improve the facilities for women prison officers who are now working at Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A number of toilets and showers have been designated for the use of female staff only. Current redevelopment will also permit the incorporation of dedicated female toilets, showers and changing rooms in the reception area and hospital wing in spring 1991. Additional facilities for women staff will come into use in 1992 when the current refurbishment of D wing is complete. All of these developments have been agreed following consultations at HM prison Wandsworth.

Police Medals

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in the past 10 years failed to qualify for long service and good conduct medals because their official retirement date fell within two weeks of the qualifying period; and how many exceptions have been granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not held centrally.

Immigration

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position on immigration, visas and asylum being determined by a European union, following the agreement at the European Council that the issue be considered; and when these issues will be considered by an intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The conclusion of the European Council was that consideration should be given to whether and how activities currently conducted in an inter-governmental framework could be "brought within the ambit of the Union".
Immigration, visas and asylum were cited as examples of matters which might be considered for such treatment.

This part of the European Council's conclusions is clearly distinguished from the part relating to possible extensions of Community competence. We do not believe, and it is not envisaged, that immigration, visas and asylum matters should be brought within the Treaty of Rome.

The intergovernmental conference on political union is now under way and the Government will play a full part in the discussions. It is not yet clear at what stage particular individual items will be considered.

Television Licence Fee

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will announce the findings of the independent consultancy on the level of the television licence fee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Following a recommendation of the Peacock committee in 1986 (Cmnd. 9824), for the three years April 1988 to April 1990 the television licence fee was increased annually in line with changes in the retail prices index. My right hon. Friend, Lord Waddington announced on 11 October 1990 that he had appointed Price Waterhouse as independent consultants to help set the level of the fee from April 1991 onwards. They were asked to assess how future increases in the fee could be set below the level of inflation measured by the RPI, and the consequences of a range of formulas for such increases, while maintaining the BBC's "cornerstone" role in British broadcasting.

Price Waterhouse reported to me in mid December, and the management summary of its report is being published today by HMSO. The remainder will not be released since it contains commercially sensitive material.

The consultants concluded that, while maintaining the present level of service, the BBC would be able to make financial improvements totalling £203 million over the five years from 1991 to 1996. These comprise £72 million in extra revenue and £131 million in savings. In addition, the BBC is required to make savings of £180 million to finance its expected future deficit. The Price Waterhouse report has been discussed with the consultants and the BBC and I am satisfied that improvements of this order are achievable. I therefore believe that, in the interests of licence fee payers, who require a licence if they wish to watch a public television service, the fee should now be held below the level of the RPI increase.

Price Waterhouse suggested two ways of doing this, both with the same net effect over five years. I have decided that its proposal to set the April 1991 increase at 3 per cent. below RPI, with annual increases at RPI over the subsequent four years is the better of the two methods. I intend, however, to reassess the position in three years' time, taking the opportunity to review the BBC's progress in achieving efficiency gains and further developing alternative sources of revenue. Price Waterhouse has also made some further suggestions to me about the operation of the licence fee, and I will also consider within the same time scale whether they should be implemented. The longer-term future of the licence fee as the principal means of financing the BBC will be considered as part of the review of the present charter which will be necessary before its expiry in December 1996.

The licence fee increase each April has been calculated on the basis of the annual increase in RPI in the 12 months up to the preceding September, in the same way as increases in pensions and other state benefits. The RPI figure for September 1990 was 10·9 per cent., and applying an RPI-3 per cent. factor of 7·9 per cent. to the unrounded 1990 figures leads to new fees from 1 April 1991 of £77 for a colour licence and £25·50 for a monochrome licence. The necessary regulations will be laid before the House in due course.

THE ARTS

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the sums of money from all sources which he is making available directly from his Department or in conjunction with others to the Welsh National Opera in the present financial year; what was the comparable figure in 1989-90; and if he will list the projected figures for 1991-92 and subsequent years insofar as firm or tentative projections have been made.

Mr. Renton: The Welsh National Opera is funded jointly by the Arts Council of Great Britain and the Welsh Arts Council. The information requested is as follows:

£'000s

	ACGB	WAC
1989-90	2,669	1,791
1990-91	2,935	1,972
1991-92	[1]3,100	2,130

[1] Provisional allocation.

Levels of funding for future years have yet to be determined.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions have taken place between his officials and the Welsh National Opera about finances; what differences have arisen over the financial contribution of the Government to the Welsh National Opera; and what differences still remain.

Mr. Renton: The funding of the Welsh National Opera is a matter for the Arts Council of Great Britain and the Welsh Arts Council. The chairman of the ACGB met the chairman and members of the board of the WNO on 8 January to discuss the company's current financial position. I understand that the meeting was helpful and constructive. Further detailed discussions are being arranged between the two funding bodies and the company, with the intention of achieving a mutually acceptable outcome. I very much welcome this positive development.

PRIME MINISTER

Hereditary Baronetcy Awards

Mr. Rees: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy with regard to the considerations which he takes into account before making any recommendation for the award of a hereditary baronetcy; when this policy last changed; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It was the policy of my predecessor to consider recommending hereditary honours in exceptional cases. I propose to follow a similar practice.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what treaty amendments are being considered for submission to the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The Conclusions of the Rome European Councils on 27 and 28 October and on 14 and 15 December listed a number of areas where treaty revision would be considered in the context of the intergovernmental conferences on political union and EMU.

Rural Housing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister if he will visit the Montgomery constituency to receive representations concerning housing for young people in rural areas.

The Prime Minister: I have no present plans to visit Montgomeryshire. Close partnership between local authorities, housing associations and the private sector is essential in securing appropriate housing for young people, as for others, in rural areas. Housing for Wales is giving strong assistance by devoting 25 per cent. of its programme to rural areas; its survey of housing and young people in rural Wales will help to target future investment.

Export Licences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has any plans to change the procedure for applying for export licences where there is a defence implication; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 29 November 1990 at columns 1060-61.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his reply on 17 December, Official Report, column 15, if he will publish the guidance given to departmental Ministers regarding the use of publicity and advertising paid for by public funds.

The Prime Minister: The conventions on Government publicity and advertising have already been published. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on 28 June 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) at column 311.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Community

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what distinctions are drawn in policy between defence and security in the context of negotiations on extending the competence of the EC.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Twelve already discuss some aspects of security within the framework of European political co-operation. As part of the process of closer foreign policy co-ordination among the Twelve, we see scope to develop this further, but would not support the extension of Community competence into this area. Defence itself—the planning, organisation, command, control and commitment of military forces—is one aspect of broader security policy. We believe that NATO should remain the main forum for consultation on defence matters affecting the alliance as a whole. Closer European co-operation on defence could be achieved by strengthening the Western European Union.

Khmer Rouge

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose in the United Nations Security Council a ban on the movement of arms and logistic support to the Khmer Rouge by whatever route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Nations Security Council resolution 668 of 20 September 1990 endorsed the framework for a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict, an integral element of which is the cessation of outside military assistance to all Cambodian parties.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will call on the Chinese Government to end their support for the Khmer Rouge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 17 December to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will halt all British support in whatever form, direct or indirect, to the Khmer Rouge and its allies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) of 17 December. We have never given and will never give support of any kind to the Khmer Rouge.

Iraq

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Iraqi diplomats have left the United Kingdom at the request of Her Majesty's Government; and on what dates in each of the past three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following members of Iraqi embassy staff have been requested by Her Majesty's Government to leave the United Kingdom.

1988: Four—one on 30 September 1988
—three on 29 October 1988.
1989: None.
1990: 11—Six on 17 September 1990
—four on 19 September 1990
—one on 10 November 1990
1991: 9—3 January 1991.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British diplomats have left Iraq at the request of the Iraqi authorities; and on what dates in each of the past three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Seven members of the British embassy in Baghdad have been declared persona non grata in the past three years; four in October 1988, two in September 1990 and one in November 1990.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of Her Majesty's diplomatic corps are currently accredited to the British embassy in Baghdad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have recalled our ambassador in Baghdad and the remaining members of his staff for consultations.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representatives of the Government of Iraq are currently accredited to the embassy of Iraq in London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Fifteen diplomatic agents; twelve administrative and technical staff; five service staff.

Cambodia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the Government of Thailand in their efforts to make peace with the Cambodian Government and to remove Khmer Rouge bases from Thai soil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support all constructive efforts to achieve peace in Cambodia. Thailand has played a helpful part in recent efforts to establish a functioning Supreme National Council and remains a key regional player in the search for a comprehensive settlement of the Cambodian conflict.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will now deal with the Government of Hun Sen as the legitimate Government of Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), of 17 December, I reaffirmed our willingness to talk to representatives of the Hun Sen regime to urge them to co-operate in restoring peace to Cambodia on the basis of the five's framework. Accordingly, on 22 December the head of the south-east Asian Department in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office met a Cambodian Vice-Minister, Mr. Uch Kiman, in Paris. This meeting did not constitute formal dealings with the Hun Sen regime as the legitimate Government of Cambodia.

Corfu Channel Incident

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently being taken to settle outstanding financial questions relating to the Corfu channel incident of 1946.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British and Albanian officials met in Geneva on 18 and 19 December to discuss outstanding bilateral issues.

Albania

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently being taken to establish diplomatic relations with the People's Socialist Republic of Albania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British and Albanian officials met in Geneva on 18 and 19 December to discuss outstanding bilateral issues, including the restoration of diplomatic relations.

Mr. Tariq Aziz

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons he has opposed the visit of Tariq Aziz to meet EEC representatives in Rome.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 4 December the Foreign Minister of the European Community invited the Iraqi Foreign Minister to meet the presidency following his meeting with the United States Secretary of State. This invitation has been renewed several times, most recently after the EPC ministerial meeting in Luxembourg on 4 January, but has been declined by the Iraqi Government.

El Salvador

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the Government of El Salvador to accept the United Nations peace proposal.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have frequently made clear to all sides in El Salvador the importance we and the international community attach to a successful outcome of the peace talks under the auspices of the United Nations. We condemn the renewed offensive by the FMLN at the end of last year.

The Gulf

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of maps delineating the precise border, with all co-ordinates, which existed between Iraq and Kuwait after each significant alteration since their establishment in international law; and if he will place a copy of each relevant treaty, agreement or draft agreement to which the United Kingdom was a party which is relevant to the establishment of that border.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Extracts from the Anglo-Turkish convention of 1913, and copies of letters by the Prime Minister of Iraq and the Sheikh of Kuwait in 1932 confirming recognition of the Iraq-Kuwait frontiers, are being placed in the Library of the House. A map attached to the 1913 convention may be examined at the Public Records Office.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations have been made by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission for the eventuality of war in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am replying in the absence of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, who is chairman of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission.

The answer is none. The Commonwealth War Graves Commission is responsible for commemorating and caring for the graves of those who died while serving in the armed forces of the Commonwealth during the first and second world wars.

Romanian Orphans

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the voluntary organisations known to be providing aid to Romanian orphans and the amount of aid, if known; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We do not have details of all British voluntary aid to Romanian children, but we are aware of a number of the organisation concerned. I shall write to my hon. Friend with a list. We have no information about the amount of aid. We fully support all efforts to improve conditions for children in Romania.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action his Department is taking to ensure that India respects the human rights of people who are now living in the Indian occupied area of Kashmir before any aid allocation to India is considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The importance we attach to "good government" when considering our aid programme is well known. While we support the Indian Government's efforts to deal with the serious challenge from terrorist violence in Kashmir, we have regularly made clear to them our concern that human rights must be respected.

European Community Ombudsman

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the views of Her Majesty's Government on the concept of a Community ombudsman to protect the rights of citizens in the EC, following the agreement of the European Council that the matter should be examined, and on the matters which will be considered in relation to the particular problems in some member states.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Suggestions have been made by other member states for establishing a European Community ombudsman. These will be discussed in the intergovernmental conference. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said in the debate on 11 June last year, we will examine this idea sympathetically, on condition that it does not duplicate or overlap with member states' existing arrangements and provides a service of value to the individual citizen without creating unnecessary bureaucracy.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the results of the investigation by Customs and Excise into licences granted to Matrix Churchill for sales of machine tools to Iraq; and if he will place a copy of the results, when completed, in the Library.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Investigation of possible export licensing offences is a matter for the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, acting in their independent law enforcement capacity. They carry out their inquiries thoroughly and expeditiously. It would not be appropriate for information relating to an investigation to be made public other than in the course of court proceedings.

EC Support Framework

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the 1990 allocation of the Community support framework for operational programmes 3 and 4 from the Commission of the European Community was received by his Department; and if it is currently attracting interest payments.

Mr. Maude: The United Kingdom's contribution to the Community budget is paid into a Community account held in the United Kingdom, from which payments to the United Kingdom are also usually made. For the structural funds' objective 3 and 4 programmes, EC payments to the United Kingdom follow the pattern of our other budget receipts. On authorisation by the Commission from time to time, the sums are withdrawn from the Community's account in the United Kingdom and paid to the sponsor department for onward transmission to end recipients. Payments for objective 3 and 4 programmes have therefore been made by the Treasury when authorised by the Commission; and subsequently by Departments when they have been vetted. The United Kingdom derives the benefit from any balance on the Community's account which the Commission has not authorised to be paid for any particular purpose.

Expatriates (Middle East)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the position of British expatriates presently working in the middle east in the event of any forceable repatriation of such individuals with respect to the conditions pertaining to their exemption from British taxation for the period of their repatriation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 18 December 1990, at column 111.

VAT

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what vehicle of decision making within the EEC is to be used to complete proceedings to achieve approximation of the VAT system and excise duties within the EEC to satisfy the requirements of a true internal market; and for what reasons Her Majesty's Government agreed that the proceedings should be completed in the near future.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The vehicle within the EC for deciding the arrangements for the operation of the VAT and excise systems after 1992 is the EC's Economic and Financial Affairs Council—ECOFIN—acting unanimously on proposals from the Commission.

Following extensive consultations with representatives of British industry, on 12 December 1990 the United Kingdom lifted its reserve on an outline agreement for the VAT control system to operate after 1992. Also, at ECOFIN on 17 December agreement was reached on the general principles which will form the basis of the system for excise controls after 1992. These have cleared the way for discussions on the details of the systems, early agreement on which is essential for businesses and tax administrations to have sufficient time to plan and implement technical changes.

The Government believe that the framework arrangements on the VAT and excise technical systems meet the requirement to remove fiscal frontiers by 1 January 1993, which is a key part of completing the single market. The Government remain of the view that centrally determined tax approximation is neither necessary nor desirable and that market forces can bring about such convergence of indirect tax rates as is necessary.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how long it takes the Customs and Excise to process VAT registered trade importation packages from overseas; what is the normal expected delay before passing valuable goods packages to the Post Office, and what is the process in the case of VAT-exempt goods of more than 100 years old.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All packages imported through the post remain under the control of the Post Office and are presented by them to customs for clearance. Clearance times vary according to the nature and origin of the contents and the quality of accompanying information. Importers are notified of the arrival of all goods exceeding £2,000 in value, or £1,300 in the case of Datapost packages, and they are required to submit a formal entry. On receipt of that entry by customs, clearance is normally effected without delay. Where relief from customs duty and VAT is claimed in respect of goods of any value over 100 years old a separate declaration by the importer is necessary. Subsequent action will depend upon the nature of the declaration made and supporting evidence produced.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the economic implications of central Government control of local authority capital borrowing.

Mr. Mellor: Central Government control over local authority borrowing for capital purposes forms an important part of the overall system of public expenditure control, and is therefore essential to the economic health of the country. This control also reduces the risk that community chargepayers may face excessive debt interest payments and that an excessive burden of debt may prevent local authorities from maintaining adequate and efficient services.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the effective upper and lower limits which sterling is permitted to move to by comparison with the deutschemark within the ERM; and if he will publish a table showing the movement of sterling since joining the ERM.

Mr. Maples: Sterling's upper and lower limits in the ERM against the deutschemark are DM 3·132 and DM 2·778 respectively. Sterling's effective upper and lower limits against the deutschemark are determined by the need for sterling to remain within its bilateral limits against all other ERM currencies simultaneously. The effective upper limit against the deutschemark is the rate at which sterling would reach its upper limit against the weakest ERM currency. The effective lower limit is determined by sterling's position against the strongest currency in the system. The effective limits vary over time in line with the movements of exchange rates within the system.

Sterling's movement against the deutschemark since its entry to the ERM are as follows:

Average exchange rate week commencing	DM/£

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider withdrawing sterling from the ERM; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Council

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 19 and 20 December.

Mr. Gummer: Together with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the Scottish Office, Lord Strathclyde, I attended the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Brussels on 19 and 20 December 1990.

Once again, after a considerable struggle, we obtained recognition of our Hague preference for all the stocks where it was relevant and secured flexibility to take both an increased quantity of western mackerel east of 4 west and an extension to the area in which it may be taken.

We also secured increases in the United Kingdom quotas proposed by the Commission for 26 of the 49 stocks of interest to our fleet. As a result we now have increases in 13 quotas compared to 1990 with 21 quotas remaining the same. The increases in the cod and haddock quota proposals in the North sea, for whiting and cod in the Irish sea and for a number of plaice and sole quotas in the channel and the south-west will be particularly welcome to the industry. We have however sought to avoid any increases which would not be in accordance with conservation needs.

In addition, we secured a very useful quota swap arrangement with the Netherlands so obtaining all the Dutch quotas in area VII as well as some North sea herring and sole.

Given the state of the North sea and west of Scotland cod and haddock stocks it was essential to take action to reduce effort. The International Council for the Exploration of the Sea had made clear that, by themselves, TACs and quotas could not be relied upon to achieve this. Accordingly the Council agreed to an eight-day tie-up rule for vessels which have taken significant quantities of these stocks. I was disappointed that we could not secure an arrangement which would allow fishermen the alternative of using more selective gear. I put on record at the Council that I would be pursuing this and I received a helpful response from the Commissioner.

We fought for improved technical conservation measures. We made it clear that we were prepared to agree to an increase in mesh size in the North sea and west of Scotland to 100mm diamond with a 90mm square mesh panel. We regret that, because some member states did not want their fishermen to be affected, the Council could not agree to this. However, we secured agreement that the Council must return to this issue in the near future and in order to provide further evidence to the other member states we will be commissioning more research on the use of different mesh sizes and square mesh panels, together with further research on whiting.

We are encouraged by such experience as we already have where practical fishermen have put square mesh panels into practice and have liked the result. This is exactly the kind of conservation measure which ought to be put into practice along with TACs and which the Council has failed to adopt. We shall now be consulting with our industry about introducing unilaterally a 90mm square mesh panel. This will be important in protecting the 1990 year class of haddock.

Amendments to EC regulation 4028/86 on fisheries structures were agreed which include the extension of grant aid to boats less than 9 metres and measures to encourage EC boats to fish in third country waters. Changes were made at the Council meeting to the proposed rates of grant for these measures to reflect the overcapacity in the EC fleet.

On autonomous tariff quotas a balanced package was achieved which should assist the processors including a tariff suspension at 10 per cent. for hake and alaska pollack fillet blocks.

Overall, although I regret that the Council could not agree on technical conservation measures I consider that we have secured a package which is consistent with conservation of the stocks and which should benefit catchers, processors and consumers.

Cod

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the implications for likely cod landings at Lowestoft in 1991 of invoking the Hague preference for cod.

Mr. Curry: The Hague preference has not been invoked for North sea cod.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the allocation of cod quotas from the middle to end of December; and what distributions were made between Scottish and English fisheries and between sector and non-sector.

Mr. Curry: There are four United Kingdom cod fisheries. Fishing for North sea cod by all licensed United Kingdom fishing vessels was suspended on Saturday 15 December 1990, following exhaustion of the licensed fleet's share of the United Kingdom quota. Fishing by unlicensed under 10 m vessels continued in this fishery until the end of the month. Fishing for west of Scotland cod by all United Kingdom fishing vessels was prohibited on 5 December 1990, following exhaustion of the entire United Kingdom quota. The Irish sea cod fishery remained open for the whole of December, both to those English and Northern Irish producer organisations with sectoral allocations, and to all other vessels with the necessary licence subject to a 2 tonnes per vessel per month catch restriction. The channel cod fishery, in which there were no sectoral allocations in 1990, also remained open to all appropriately licensed vessels throughout December, subject to a 5 tonnes per vessel per month catch restriction.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what redress he expects to make in 1991 to English fishermen who fished within quota for 1990; and what sanctions against those who overfished in 1990 he plans to take.

Mr. Curry: Arrangements for penalties and compensation to apply to overfishing in 1990 have already been agreed with the industry. Under these arrangements, where a group exceeded its allocation in 1990, the overfish will not be included in track records when calculating the 1991 allocation. Where that overfish led to the United Kingdom quota being exceeded, and other groups being disadvantaged by the early closure of a fishery, the overfish will be deducted from the offending group's 1991 allocation. This deduction will then be used to compensate groups prejudiced by the overfishing, after taking account of those groups' likely uptake had the fishery not been closed.

North Sea Sole

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's role in collection of data which led to the closure of the North sea sole fishery in November.

Mr. Curry: The closure of the North sea sole fishery in November 1990 was due to a combination of factors. They included increased effort in the fishery, an increase in the size of fish caught as a result of earlier conservation measures, and increased landings abroad as well as a delay in some landing data appearing on Departments' central computers.

Milk Marketing Scheme

Mr. Turner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the report of the Consumers' Committee for England and Wales on the milk marketing scheme 1933.

Mr. Gummer: Yes.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has of undersized cod, plaice and sole being landed and sold at fishing ports in the Netherlands.

Mr. Curry: The enforcement of EC fisheries regulations in the Netherlands is a matter for the Dutch authorities. The EC Commission's inspectorate monitors enforcement arrangements in member states, but I have no information about the landing and sale of undersized fish in the Netherlands.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on how his Department informs fishing organisations, companies and individuals on sudden unexpected changes in the fishing regime around United Kingdom ports in general, and Lowestoft in particular.

Mr. Curry: Changes to fisheries management measures are publicised by means of a news release issued to the trade press, and at the same time Fisheries Departments write to national and local fishing organisations. Local fisheries officers also make every effort to inform fishermen in their area individually. Variations to fishing licences are issued by local port offices as soon as possible after the announcement.

Small Family Farms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food if he will make a statement on his assessment of the implication for the future of the small family farm of the GATT discussions.

Mr. Curry: The Community offer on agricultural reform remains under negotiation in the GATT round. It is premature to forecast the final agreement or its impact. The Commission has given an undertaking to make proposals for changes in agricultural support, consistent with a GATT agreement, aimed at ensuring a viable future for Community farmers.

Sheep Farmers (Subsidies)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to decouple subsidies to sheep farmers from farm production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Support to sheep farmers in the United Kingdom is provided primarily through the EC sheep regime and the system of hill livestock compensatory allowances, which are also governed by EC regulations. Any proposals fundamentally to change the basis on which this support is granted would, therefore, be a matter for the European Commission.

Cereals

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to ensure that S.I. (1975) No. 655, the Measurement of Cereals for Import and Export Purposes Regulations 1975, is conformed to by the intervention board.

Mr. Curry: The Measurement of Cereals for Import and Export Purposes Regulations 1975 (S.I. 1975 No. 655) lay down certain provisions in relation to trade in cereals between the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Community. The intervetion board does not engage in intra-Community trade in cereals and the regulations are not considered relevant to its operations.

Food Aid

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the expected impact of the food aid programme for the Soviet Union agreed at the European Council on 15 December 1990, on planned EC spending on agriculture.

Mr. Curry: The European Council agreed to supply 250 million ecu—£174 million—of food aid to the USSR. This will be funded from the underspend in the 1990 European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund guarantee budget. No decision has been made on the type and quantities of food involved and it is not yet possible to assess any other effects on Community agricultural expenditure.

Farming Incomes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on trends in farming incomes.

Mr. Curry: Forecasts of farm incomes in 1990 will be published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" later this month.

Salmonella

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conclusions he has reached in his review of the Government's policy on the control of salmonella.

Mr. Gummer: In 1989 the Government introduced a comprehensive programme for tackling the problem of salmonella in poultry and eggs. This programme has been effective in reducing potential sources of infection and will be maintained. I have made it clear, however, that the detailed form of control would be kept under careful review in the light of developing knowledge and experience. This has been done, taking into account the views of the Department of Health and the public health laboratory service.

The Government measures are aimed at reducing infection throughout the production chain, from the supply of feedingstuffs to the production of healthy breeding stock and controls on laying flocks. This integrated approach is the best means of minimising the risk of infection in all types of poultry flocks and will continue.

The measures on feedingstuffs include statutory controls on the production of animal protein, which require regular sampling of feed and reprocessing if any salmonella is found. Rigorous controls are also applied to imports of animal protein. In addition the feed industry operate codes of practice aimed at ensuring that their products are free of salmonella.

The programme for controlling salmonella in breeding flocks concentrates in particular on monitoring of progeny through the hatcheries and the slaughter of infected breeding stock, both in the egg production and poultry meat sectors, in order to minimise the risk of transmission of infection to production flocks. Through the application of these measures to date 35 broiler breeder flocks and five layer breeder flocks have been compulsorily slaughtered with payment of compensation. These arrangements will continue unchanged.

In relation to commercial flocks producing eggs for human consumption, I have reviewed carefully information from the state veterinary service and the public health laboratory service on the incidence of infection and trends in human food poisoning. It is clear that a continued distinction needs to be drawn between the many different types of salmonella. From the start the Government measures have concentrated on two particular types which had been considered a potential risk to human health, while retaining the flexibility to alter the coverage of the programme in the light of further evidence on the risk from different types of salmonella.

One of these types, salmonella enteritidis, was responsible for the increase in human food poisoning cases which led to the introduction of the Government measures. Data from laboratory testing indicate that the incidence of salmonella enteritidis in the commercial laying sector has subsequently dropped significantly. However, salmonella enteritidis remains a significant cause of human food poisoning. I have therefore concluded that it remains essential to maintain the compulsory slaughter programme for all laying flocks which are infected with salmonella enteritidis. The other type which has hitherto been treated in the same way is salmonella typhimurium. In the light of further scientific data I have concluded that the arrangements for dealing with this type in relation to laying flocks should be modified. The Chief Medical Officer agrees with this view.

Evidence from the public health laboratory service indicates that the number of cases of salmonella typhimurium food poisoning in humans has fallen significantly over the last year and the number of outbreaks of salmonella typhimurium food poisoning linked to eggs is now extremely low. Unlike salmonella enteritidis, this type is not predominantly associated with poultry but is frequently found in the environment and in other animal species. When it does occur in poultry which are being reared for egg production, it is predominantly a disease of young birds—pullets—rather than adult birds. Infection in pullet flocks presents no direct risk to public health, as the birds are not producing eggs. Young birds can be treated and my officials will give advice to flock owners on appropriate treatment arrangements. The automatic slaughter policy for laying flocks infected with salmonella typhimurium will be discontinued but the arrangements for monitoring and reporting of infection will continue. Salmonella typhimurium will therefore be placed in the same category as all types of salmonella, other than salmonella enteritidis, where existing measures will continue to be taken where necessary to protect public health.

The Government have published today the second part of the report of the Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food. Among the committee's conclusions is a recommendation that the topic of salmonella in eggs should be considered by the new advisory committee and steering group on the microbiological safety of food. The Government have agreed in their response that the issue of salmonella in eggs needs to be kept under close review and will be examining a number of issues which remain to be resolved. One of these issues, on which research is currently under way, is the pasteurisation of eggs from infected flocks. European Community proposals on the control of salmonella enteritidis are expected to include this treatment, as part of an alternative method of control involving the safe disposal of products from infected flocks rather than compulsory slaughter.

The salmonella control measures as a whole will be assessed further in the light of progress in the European Community discussions. It remains the Government's firm objective to secure Communitywide measures on salmonella which ensure that consumers are protected, whether consuming home produced or imported products, and that producers throughout the Community operate to the same high standards as in this country.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions poultry farms which have had flocks slaughtered due to salmonella infection have been reinfected, with consequent flock slaughter (a) once and (b) more than once.

Mr. Maclean: There have been eight instances where poultry have been compulsorily slaughtered, following previous compulsory slaughter on the same farm. In only two of these cases was the same strain of salmonella involved on both occasions. There have been no instances of slaughter being required more than twice on the same premises.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 485, if he will make a statement on the negotiations for the adoption of comprehensive Community rules setting higher welfare standards for animals during all stages of transport.

Mr. Maclean: A Council working group meeting to discuss the Commission's proposals was held in February 1990 but there have been no subsequent negotiations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, columns 427-28, on the value of the state earnings-related pension, he will give figures for each year from 1999 to 2029 on the same basis.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is given in the table. It is important to note that calculations of this nature can provide only a hypothetical view of the distant future based, as they are, on unchanged assumptions about economic variables and policies.

The weekly amounts of additional pension payable on retirement on 6 April in the stated year are as follows:

Year of retirement	(a)	(b)	(c)
1999	38·50	94·25	134·25
2000	40·90	99·60	140·80

2028	227·90	491·95	594·30
2029	241·80	518·15	621·20

(a) A person on half average earnings.
(b) A person on average earnings.
(c) A person earning at or above the upper earnings limit.

Notes: From 1990 onwards 5 per cent. prices and 6·5 per cent. earnings growth is assumed. Average earnings are those for all full-time workers on adult rates in all industries and services, excluding those affected by absence.

Disability Allowance

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the rate of disability allowance for each of the last 10 years and indicate when it is next due for review.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand the right hon. Member's question was intended to refer to the disability premium which was introduced in the income support and reformed housing benefit schemes in April 1988, in the community charge rebate scheme in April 1989 in Scotland, and in the community charge benefit scheme from April 1990. In common with other premiums, the disability premium is reviewed each year as part of the annual benefit uprating exercise. The rates of the premium, including the proposed rates for April 1991, are as follows:

	April 1988 £	April 1989 £	April 1990 £	[1]April 1991 £
Rate for a single person	13·05	13·70	15·40	16·65
Rate for couples	18·60	19·50	22·10	23·90

[1]Proposed.

Since April 1990 the disabled child premium has been payable for each disabled child at the same rate as the disability premium for a single adult.

Children

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of children in Scotland dependent on supplementary benefit or income support in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of children under 16 years in families on supplementary benefit in 1979 was 109,000. The number of children under 16 years in families on income support in 1989 was 223,000.
Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries for 1979 and 1989.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the number of sufferers from myalgic encephalomyelitis who have applied for (a) mobility allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) sickness benefits and have been refused because their illness is not recognised by the Department of Social Security in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: No myalegic encephalomyelitis sufferers in Scotland have been refused mobility allowance, attendance allowance or sickness benefits on the ground that their illness is not recognised.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had from sufferers of myalgic encephalomyelitis seeking his assistance in obtaining state benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A number of representations have been made by, and on behalf of, people suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis about the general difficulties they face. We understand their concerns and continue to consider them sympathetically.

Care Homes (Residents' Leave)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate he has made of the number of claimants in care homes who have lost benefit during leave periods through the incorrect interpretation of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulation, schedule 7 and paragraph 7(1)(a);

(2) when he intends to issue new guidelines to adjudication officers with regard to their interpretation of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations, schedule 7, paragraph 7(1)(a) concerning benefit payments to care home residents during leave periods.

Miss Widdecombe: No such estimate has been made. The regulation is clear in its intention and it is for the independent adjudication officer to determine the correct application in each case. We are looking at the implications of this regulation for people in certain circumstances in residential care and nursing homes.

Income Support

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the level of income support from April 1991 to ensure it does not fall below the rate of inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: It has been reviewed. In his uprating statement of 24 October last year my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, announced that income-related benefits, including income support, would rise by 8·1 per cent. from next April.

The uprating is based, as usual, on the RPI less housing costs. This is because, for those receiving income support, help with rent is available through housing benefit and help with mortgage interest is available separately within the income support scheme.

Fostering

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's payment to a local authority for children aged under five years in a foster home.

Mr. Jack: The Department makes no such payment. The maintenance of these children is covered by boarding out allowances paid by local authorities, which are met from the revenue support grant.

Coventry Cyrenians

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will propose changes to income support and social fund legislation following the cases raised with him by the letter from the Coventry Cyrenians, dated 14 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No. We are satisfied that current social security policy for homeless young people is correct. A copy of my reply to the Coventry Cyrenians has been sent to the hon. Member.

Benefit Expenditure

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the reduction from 97 per cent. to 95 per cent. of grant for housing benefit and poll tax benefit is still to be implemented; what will be the savings to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The basic rate of direct subsidy for housing benefit and community charge benefit will be reduced from 97 per cent. to 95 per cent. from April 1991. Although this will result in a reduction in direct subsidy of some £86 million, the effect of this reduction was fully taken into account in drawing up the proposed local government financial settlements for 1991-92.

Claimants, Warwickshire

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures for Coventry and Warwickshire for how many people are dependent on (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available to show the number of people dependent on income support, family credit and housing benefit and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The latest available information for the number of claims to these benefits in Coventry and Warwickshire is as follows:

	Coventry	Warwickshire
Income support[1]	33,453	25,368
Family Credit[2]	1,522	3,331
Housing Benefit[3]	22,992	23,357

[1] Derived from 30 November 1990 count of 100 per cent. of cases in action which include a number where payment had ceased but other action was continuing.

[2] Number of families receiving Family Credit who, at the time their award was made, were living in Coventry or Warwickshire. These figures do not include awards made after 28 December 1990.

[3] Number of people receiving Housing Benefit on 31 August 1990.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

12. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial application British Rail has made for the provision of passenger and cargo facilities in Liverpool to ensure direct access to the channel tunnel rail system.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail proposes to have a terminal on Merseyside for international freight services. Passengers between Liverpool and the continent will need to change in London or at Crewe.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has met the chairman of British Rail to discuss rail links between Scotland and the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend last met Sir Bob Reid on 12 December when a number of issues, including channel tunnel services running north of London, were discussed.

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the environmental aspects of the proposed high-speed rail link.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail intends to publish a full environmental statement for its final preferred route, taking into account the representations received in the course of public consultations.

Transport Policy

13. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role he envisages for the railway within transport policy.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's network is an important part of the transport system in this country. It will benefit from our policy of aiming to improve all forms of transport. Railways can make their contribution to a safer, more efficient and less environmentally damaging transport system. They will do this by providing a service that people choose to use on the grounds of convenience and cost.

Midland Main Line

14. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed the midland main line with the chairman of British Rail; whether he discussed possible improvements to the Leicester to St. Pancras section; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I welcome the improved service which British Rail now offers on the midland main line, and I am keeping in touch with British Rail about plans for possible further improvements.

Road Safety

15. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government intend to take additional measures to improve existing road and rail access to the channel tunnel from Wales and the west of England.

Mr. Freeman: The national roads programme includes major schemes to improve access from Wales and the west of England to the tunnel and channel ports. British Rail has announced investment of over £1·4 billion in tunnel-related improvements for freight and passenger services.

London Underground

16. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of London Underground track are currently in use for passenger services north of the River Thames, and how many are in use south of the River Thames.

Mr. Freeman: London Underground has 438 miles of track north of the Thames and 33 miles south of the Thames that are currently in use for passenger services.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether London Underground has sought any additional funding to cover the projected shortfall of £52 million in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: London Transport has requested additional funding this year. We are considering its request.

Public Transport (Hackney)

17. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to visit Hackney to discuss public transport.

Mr. Freeman: I discussed public transport matters with representatives of the London borough of Hackney when I visited Tower Hamlets on 27 September. I have no plans to visit Hackney at present; if the hon. Member has a specific concern, perhaps she could write to me.

London Regional Transport

20. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss performance targets.

Mr. Freeman: I meet the chairman of London Transport regularly to discuss a variety of issues, including performance targets.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in his consideration of the appointment of a chairman of London Regional Transport, he takes into account his ability to be financially competent and to manage senior staff to ensure their financial competence.

Mr. Freeman: Yes; my right hon. and learned Friend would take account of these and many other relevant factors.

Bathgate Station

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his predecessor's official visit to Bathgate railway station in November.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend was impressed by the success of the Edinburgh-Bathgate line since its re-opening to passenger services.

Dial-a-Ride

23. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he intends to respond to representations about the reorganisation of Dial-a-Ride in London.

Mr. Freeman: I am still considering representations received from my hon. Friend and others. I expect to give my hon. Friend a written answer shortly.

Rail Services (South-East)

24. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss extending the passenger service to towns in the south-east that are not yet linked into Network SouthEast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is a matter for British Rail to come forward with proposals for opening lines where there is a commercial case. I understand that Network SouthEast is currently consulting interested parties about various proposals for public transport in the Luton-Dunstable corridor.

Transport Supplementary Grant

25. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the criteria for payment of transport supplementary grant for road development.

Mr. Chope: The criteria for payment of transport supplementary grant to local highway authorities in support of their capital expenditure on highways and the regulation of traffic are set out in a local authority circular No. 1/90, a copy of which is in the Library. TSG in 1991-92 will be 17 per cent. higher than in 1990-91, and in addition £45 million TSG will be made available for work on bridges making a total of £318 million.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the transport supplementary grant settlement for Essex in the last two years.

Mr. Chope: Essex received £5·1 million net transport supplementary grant in 1989-90 and £6·7 million in 1990-91. In 1991-92 it will receive £6·4 million.

Parking (London)

26. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any recent discussions on the problems of parking in London.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

Airline Security

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent steps have been taken by his Department to tighten airline security in respect of the continuing dangers posed to British interests by the crisis in the middle east.

Mr. Rifkind: All practical and possible steps are being taken through British airlines and the Governments of countries to which they fly, to tighten aviation security. We and other Governments have developed contingency plans for further measures in the event of hostilities. Aviation security is at an unprecedentedly high level. It would not be in the public interest to reveal details.

Vehicle Exhaust Pollution

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to reduce the level of vehicle exhaust pollution in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Our proposals to reduce vehicle exhaust pollution are not specific to London. We have participated actively in discussions within the EC about controls on vehicle emissions. I am pleased to say that following a decision in the EC Environment Council on 20 December 1990, strict new emission standards will apply to all new petrol driven cars from 31 December 1992 and as a result such cars will have to be fitted with catalytic convertors. We are now pressing for strict standards for gaseous and particulate emissions from goods vehicles and buses. In 1991, for the first time, we also propose to include an emissions check in the annual MOT test. Duty differentials in favour of unleaded petrol are encouraging its widespread use and it now accounts for almost 40 per cent. of all petrol sold in this country.

British Rail

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in respect of the requirement for British Rail to publish an annual corporate plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There is no requirement for British Rail to publish an annual corporate plan. I understand that the chairman of British Rail aims to publish a longer term strategy document for the railway later this year.

Railway Accidents

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he published the report into the railway accident at Walton on the Naze in 1987; whether the contents of that report have been taken into account in respect of any later incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The railway inspectorate has not yet completed its report on the Walton on the Naze accident, partly because the inspecting officer was involved as an assessor to Sir Anthony Hidden's investigation into the Clapham junction accident, but it has already ensured that the lessons learned have been put into practice. The report will be published at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirements are made by his railway inspectorate concerning provision of hydraulic buffer stops or sand drags at frequently used terminal platforms.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's railway inspectorate, which is now part of the Health and Safety Executive, has no requirement for railway operators to provide particular types of buffer stops at terminal stations. Buffer stops are generally designed to minimise injury to train passengers and damage to railway vehicles where impact is slight. If impact is made with greater force, the buffer stop should prevent a train overrunning onto the station concourse. I am advised that it would not be practicable to specify the impact loading that individual sets of buffer stops should withstand since most stations are used by a variety of rolling stock with different characteristics.

EC Regulations

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons Her Majesty's Government agreed at the European Council on 15 December 1990, that the Commission proposals on excise duties on fuel, taxes, tolls, etc., should be resolved by the Council on 30 June 1991; and if he will make a statement summarising the proposals submitted by the Commission on these matters.

Mr. Chope: These issues have been identified as among those to be addressed before completion of the internal market in 1992. The Commission proposals for the charging of transport infrastructure costs to heavy vehicles will be the subject of an explanatory memorandum to be laid before the House in the usual way.

Drivers (Health)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what medical advice is available to him on the health of drivers and motorcycle riders and on those in charge of the various forms of public transport for which he is responsible.

Mr. Chope: [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1990 c. 125]: The health of railway employees is a matter for individual railway operators.

The statutory responsibility for the safety regulations of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. This includes the medical standards for the issue of appropriate flight crew and air traffic controller licences.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Hanley: For its home civil servants, the Northern Ireland Office has access to the services of the Civil Service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals and operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom.

An occupational health service was established within the Northern Ireland Civil Service in 1988. Its primary responsibility is the occupational health care of all civil servants. At present there are three doctor posts, one nurse post and four administrative posts providing the occupational health services.

There are just under 28,600 employees in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments combined.

Rural Development

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why he has decided not to publish the report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development which will soon be completed.

Mr. Hanley: The report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Rural Development will provide advice to Ministers on ways in which the delivery of the Government's social and economic policies in the most deprived rural areas of Northern Ireland might be improved. It would not be appropriate to publish internal advice of this nature.

However, I acknowledge the continuing interest of the hon. Gentleman and others in the work of the Committee and on receipt of its report I will be considering whether and in what form more detailed information about its work and conclusions might be released.

Moyle Hospital

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the length of waiting lists for patients seeking admission to Moyle hospital, Larne; and what is the average figure for similar hospital provision within Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Number on Waiting List at 30 September 1990

Specialty	Moyle	Average of similar Hospital Provision
General Surgery	148	138
Ear, Nose and Throat	142	[1]
Gynaecology	36	120

[1]Specialty not provided.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his Department's assessment of the cost-effectiveness of basic acute specialty provision for patients admitted to Moyle hospital, Larne.

Mr. Hanley: No such assessment has been made by the Department of Health and Social Services since this is a matter for the Northern health and social services board.

Acute Hospital Beds

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acute hospital beds pro rata to its population each health board in Northern Ireland provides; and whether he will take steps to remove any inequality of provision.

Mr. Hanley: The figures requested are as follows:

HSS Board	Available Acute Beds per 1,000 population (1989-90)
Eastern	5·1
Northern	2·5
Southern	2·8
Western	2·7

The high level of provision in the Eastern board area reflects the inclusion of beds for regional medical services there. All hospitals often provide care to patients outside own board areas.

Health Policies (East Antrim)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to ensure that the Northern health and social services board implements the policies of Her Majesty's Government for the 1990s at Moyle hospital, Larne, and for the east Antrim area.

Mr. Hanley: Under the Government's proposals set out in "Working for Patients" responsibility for the provision of services to the population of Larne, and the East Antrim area falls to the Northern health and social services board. Implementation of the Government's policies by the Northern board will continue to be monitored through the annual accountability review process.

Housing Executive (Garages)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the garages owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at the rear of Wellington avenue, Larne, have tenants; and what assessment has been made of the effect the present rent level charged by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for garages on incentives to car-owning tenants of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties to use garage space available.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that there are 19 garages owned by the Executive at the rear of Wellington avenue, Larne, seven of which are rented. The Executive has given consideration to the rent levels for garages and is satisfied that they are appropriate. No incentives are offered to Housing Executive tenants in respect of the rental of available garage space.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many garages are in the ownership of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Northern Ireland; and for how many garages the Northern Ireland Housing Executive receives rental payments.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that the Executive owns 11,283 garages and rental payments are received for 7,185 of these garages.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many garages have been demolished by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that the number of garages demolished in each of the last three years is as follows:

	Number
1987-88	118
1988-89	77
1989-90	135

Primary School Pupils

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of primary school pupils in each education and library board area over the last ten years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers are as follows:

Year	Belfast	Western	North-Eastern	South-Eastern	Southern
1981	31,708	36,113	44,336	35,559	41,862
1982	30,491	35,609	42,645	34,882	41,111
1983	29,200	35,165	41,389	34,010	40,481
1984	28,825	35,015	40,725	34,183	40,310
1985	28,461	35,194	40,085	34,509	40,425
1986	28,509	35,254	39,788	34,672	40,519
1987	28,690	35,512	39,517	34,954	40,844
1988	29,158	35,541	39,390	34,935	41,098
1989	29,411	35,979	39,491	35,290	41,562
1990	29,988	36,212	39,687	35,516	41,877

School Inspectors

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many school inspectors have been employed by the Department of Education in each of the last five years; and what has been the cost of employing each of these inspectors in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of inspectors	Total cost £
1986-87	53	2,004,822
1987-88	57	2,448,024
1988-89	57	2,432,807
1989-90	57	2,646,122
1990-91	60	[1]2,987,429

[1] Estimated.

Education and Library Boards (Administration)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on administration by each of the five education and library boards in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Education and Library Boards' Administration Expenditure

Year	Belfast £000s	North-Eastern £000s	South-Eastern £000s	Southern £000s	Western £000s	Total £000s
1985-86	4,328	3,796	3,580	3,574	3,427	18,705
1986-87	4,609	4,207	3,928	3,968	3,709	10,421
1987-88	4,994	4,606	4,360	4,509	4,118	22,587
1988-89	5,237	5,294	4,839	5,460	4,735	25,565
1989-90	5,898	6,056	5,651	6,250	5,445	29,300

Tobacco Industry

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of employed persons in the tobacco industry in the Province (i) at the latest date and (ii) five years ago.

Mr. Needham: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Housing

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of housing executive properties (a) demolished and (b) replaced in each of the polling wards in Belfast for each year including and since 1979.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has informed me that the information is not available in the form requested and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost.

Pupil Costs

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the unit cost per pupil for each secondary school in each education and library board area.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Red Foxes

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the Royal Ulster Constabulary require those engaged in the shooting of red foxes for control purposes to do so with .22 rimfire rifles.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that he does not require the use of .22 rimfire rifles for the shooting of red foxes.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to offer financial compensation to sheep farmers and game preservers for depredations by red foxes.

Mr. Hanley: There are no grounds for claiming compensation for loses due to a natural predator such as a fox.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who is responsible for firearms policy in Northern Ireland in relation to rimfire and centrefire rifles suitable for vermin destruction; and what is that policy in relation to requests for .22 centrefire rifles for fox control.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responsibility for firearms licensing policy rests with the chief constable of the Royal Ulster

Constabulary but, as appeals under the firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 are to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, the chief constable consults him from time to time on aspects of firearms policy.

As part of that policy, the chief constable would not normally authorise the use of .22 centrefire rifles for fox control.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland upon what expert evidence and research his policy in respect of the firearms to be used for controlling red foxes is based; and what representations he has had on this subject.

Dr. Mawhinney: The policy on firearms for controlling red foxes has developed over many years. From time to time expert advice has been sought from the Northern Ireland Departments of Agriculture and Environment as well as from the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Most recently representations have been received from the British Association for Shooting and Conservation and the Joint Shooting Committee of Northern Ireland.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he will take to protect the fishing industry in Northern Ireland in connection with proposals being considered by the European Community involving the imposition of quotas on cod and whiting.

Mr. Hanley: The Commission's proposals for 1991 total allowable catches (TACs) and quotas were considered at the Fisheries Council held on 19 and 20 December. Ministerial colleagues from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish Office represented the United Kingdom at Council and were fully briefed, by a senior Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland official who accompanied them, on the importance of Irish sea cod and whiting (and other important stocks) to the Northern Ireland fishing industry. At Council they were successful in achieving increases in the Commission's original proposals from 6,000 tonnes to 10,000 tonnes in the cod TAC and from 6,400 tonnes to 10,000 tonnes in the whiting TAC which gave the United Kingdom 1991 quotas of 3,355 tonnes for cod and 3,865 tonnes for whiting. In addition quota swaps of 410 tonnes of cod and 320 tonnes of whiting from other member states have been agreed. This outcome represents a reasonable balance between the more immediate requirements of fishermen and the need to conserve stocks in the longer term interests of the industry.

School Traffic Patrols

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the vacancies for school traffic patrols in Northern Ireland, by education board.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 December 1991]: The numbers of vacancies at 1 December 1990 for school traffic patrols in Northern Ireland, by education board were as follows:

	Number
Belfast Education and Library Board	4
North-Eastern Education and Library Board	2
South-Eastern Education and Library Board	1
Southern Education and Library Board	0
Western Education and Library Board	4

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether training and enterprise councils are public bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) are private companies operating under a performance contract with my Department. A network of 82 TECs in England and Wales is now in place, with 46 TECs already operational and the remainder in development. The full network will be operational in the summer, some two years ahead of schedule.

EC Support Framework

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the full amount of assistance received from the Commission of the European Community for the 1990 allocation support framework for operational programmes 3 and 4.

Mr. Forth: The full amount of assistance approved to date by the European Commission for operational programmes under objectives 3 and 4 in 1990 is £229,229,551. Under the fund's rules, the Commission actually releases the money in the three stages.

The first advance of £114·6 million was received last October. My Department applied for the second advance at the earliest opportunity allowed by the fund, and payment from the Commission is expected by the end of January. My Department will similarly submit the final claim as quickly as possible.

Association of Accounting Technicians

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the work of the Association of Accounting Technicians to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Howard: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the Authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 28 January 1991 to 1 February 1991.

European Social Charter

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons Her Majesty's Government agreed at the European Council on 15 December 1990, to press ahead more actively with the action programme for the implementation of the social charter; and if he will make a statement summerising the proposals of this action programme.

Mr. Forth: The conclusions of the European Council on 15 December 1990 on the social action programme apply in particular to health and safety. The Council took the view that proposals on health and safety at work should be adopted without delay. The Government fully support this view. We have always made clear that we were prepared to accept the health and safety aspects of the social action programme.

As to the other proposals in the social action programme, the European Council asked that in speeding up proceedings, the Community should start with the matters on which rapid progress was possible. The Council set out quite clearly that they should meet the three criteria of creating and developing employment, respect for the principle of subsidiarity and respect for the diversity of tradition and custom across the Community.

The United Kingdom has consistently advocated these principles during negotiations on the social action programme and will support proposals which satisfy these criteria.

The European Commission's social action programme covers a wide range of proposals in the labour and social field. The proposals were summarised in the explanatory memoranda submitted by the Department of Employment on 6 January 1990 and 15 March 1990 (numbers 9978-89 and 9778-89).

Disability

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what grants are available to employers to enable handicapped people to operate machinery.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the percentage for the latest year available for the number of certificates concerning abortions lodged late with his Department in breach of the regulations governing the Abortion Act 1967; and if he will give the percentage of these cases in which his Department took action, broken down by the form of action taken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1989, 54 per cent. of the notification forms (HSA4) sent to the chief medical officer for abortions performed in England and Wales were received more than seven days after the date of termination. The great majority of notifications are received within 28 days. Follow up action was taken by letter in respect of 150 notifications (0·15 per cent.) where no reasonable explanation for the delay was received. We shall continue to remind doctors about the time limit and the penalty for failure to comply with it.

Marriage Guidance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the employment of counsellors in group general practices to deal with marriage guidance.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Employment of such staff by practices is a matter for GPs themselves to decide in the light of the needs of their patients and of the circumstances of their practices.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a list of regional health authorities showing how many patients in each had been waiting (a) for one year and (b) for two years for operations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table. For England as a whole the number of in-patients waiting over a year for operations has fallen by 17,086 (9 per cent.) and for those waiting over two years by 10,737 (14 per cent.) in the 12 months to March 1990. Since March 1979 the number of patients treated has increased by 24·9 per cent.

Hearing Aids

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the waiting times for hearing aids in the Trent regional health authority; and what steps are being taken to substantially reduce the waiting time for those seeking hearing aids.

Mr. Dorrell: The information about waiting times is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to write to Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman of Trent regional health authority for this information. My hon. Friend will welcome the Department's commitment to fund 12 pilot projects aimed at reducing waiting times for hearing aid services. Two hospitals in the Trent region are participating in this initiative. Also, Leicestershire health authority has received £50,000 from the waiting list fund in 1990-91 specifically for hearing aid services. This is expected to treat an additional 1,000 outpatients.

Fostering

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will order an inquiry into the circumstances of a coloured child removed from white foster parents by Lancashire county council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will review the guidelines for transracial adoptions, so as to avoid the removal of children from foster parents of different racial origin to their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All directors of social services in England on 29 January 1990 received guidance on the issues of race and culture in the placement of children for fostering and adoption. It makes clear that usually placements with a family of similar ethnic origin and religion will be most likely to meet a child's needs and safeguard his or her welfare. In some cases, however, placement with a family of a different ethnic origin may be the best choice for a particular child. All factors relevant to a child's welfare should be considered when decisions are made. Copies of the guidance (CI(90)2), which is still current, have been placed in the Library.

The social services inspectorate has made inquiries into the case in question. It has been assured that in reaching its decision to remove the child and place him for adoption with another white family, Lancashire county council gave first consideration to the child's welfare. The ethnic origins of the child were considered but were not the principal reason for the removal.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are estimated to be taking benzodiazepines on a long-term basis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no such estimates held centrally.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he has carried out any research into the efficiency and comparative cost of Temazepam Planpak, in aiding the withdrawal of patients from benzodiazepines;

(2) what withdrawal strategies are referred to by the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs in its reference to all clinical needs in respect of withdrawal from benzodiazepines being able to be met equally effectively and at less cost by standard products in the contect of less rigid, individually structured withdrawal programmes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has not funded research into the use of Temazepam Planpak, but is aware that some research has been carried out. Guidance on benzodiazepine withdrawal strategies is provided in part 4.1 of the British National Formulary. A suggested protocol for patients unable to reduce dosage using their existing drug is to transfer to diazepam, and then to reduce dosage gradually. Diazepam is available in low-dosage tablets, and allows withdrawal to be tailored flexibly to the needs of individual patients. It is also significantly less expensive than Temazepam Planpak.

Temazepam

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the general availability of a gel-filled form of tablets and on their producers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to temazepam gel-filled capsules, which are marketed by several different pharmaceutical companies. Temazepam is also available in tablet form. As medicines, all marketed forms of temazepam require licences under the Medicines Act 1968. Manufacturers of temazepam capsules and tablets have provided sufficient information to the Medicines Control Agency to satisfy the provisions of the Act.

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the reasons behind the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs refusal to allow any increase in price to recover the costs incurred in the development of Temazepam gel-filled capsules for the prevention of drug abuse; and why they have proposed that the benefit of brand-name prescribing should not be available to their originator;

(2) what is his policy on financial recognition of the cost of research and development by the pharmaceutical industry of products in categories covered by the limited list.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: One of the principles underlying the operation of the selected list scheme since its introduction in 1985 has been that, in order to achieve maximum economy, the drugs retained for NHS prescription should where possible be specified and prescribed by a non-proprietary name. The recent recommendation of the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs that temazepam capsules should not be prescribable by the relatively new proprietary name Gelthix, but only by the non-proprietary name, is in accordance with this principle.

Interleukin II

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all patients receiving chemotherapy cancer treatment at a self-governing trust hospital or a directly managed hospital, will have the drug Interleukin II available to them it if is prescribed by the senior medical doctor in charge of their treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Interleukin II is not licensed under the Medicines Act for general use in this country but, at a doctor's discretion may be recommended on a specific named patient basis or for a patient as part of a clinical trial.

Child Abuse

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent his Department collects and collates statistics from local authority social services departments covering child abuse cases referred to them, including such detail as mode of referral and nature of abuse; whether he has plans to institute the compilation and production of such statistics; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information collected centrally about child abuse relates to the number of children and young persons on child protection registers and the number of names added to and removed from the registers. The most recent information relates to the year ending 31 March 1990. This is published in the provisional feedback "Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers England 1990" and is available in the Library.

Information is not collected centrally about the number of child abuse case referrals and there are no plans to institute collection of such statistics.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down the total numbers of deaths caused by breast cancer in England and Wales for each year since 1979 into ages 16 to 24 years, 25 to 34 years, 35 to 44 years, 45 to 54 years, 55 to 64 years, and 65 years and over.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of deaths from underlying cause of breast cancer by sex in each of the age groups 15-24, 25-34, 35-44, 45-54, 55-64, and 65+ in England and Wales from 1979 to 1989 is as follows:

Hospitals

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued to general practitioners about the degree of freedom they have to refer patients to whichever hospital they, or their patient, choose, whether the hospital is directly managed or a national health service trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: GPs will have the same freedom as now to refer patients to the hospital of their choice for the appropriate treatment. A key advantage of the NHS reforms will be improved arrangements to give practical effect to this freedom.

"Contracts for Health Services: Operational Principles"—a copy of which is in the Library—provides guidance to health authorities. It emphasises the need to consult GPs on their preferred patterns of referral.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his written reply of 12 December, Official Report, columns 364-65, to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman), when he will publish further details of the proposed settlement of the dispute between the Government and people with haemophilia who were infected with the AIDS virus by contaminated blood products supplied by the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The detailed provisions of the proposed settlement are under discussion with the lawyers representing the plaintiffs. It would be inappropriate to publish further details until all plaintiffs and the court have had an opportunity to consider the full terms of the settlement and to approve them.

Neurosciences

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he knew to be the cost of moving neurosciences from Shooters hill to Denmark hill when he announced approval for the proposal in 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 27 November 1990 at c. 363.

Chiropractic

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the experience of Denmark in the provision of chiropractic within its national health service; and if he will make it his policy to include this discipline in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are aware that in Denmark chiropractic is available under the state health scheme. However, all medical treatment under the NHS must, by law, be given or presented by a registered medical practitioner or by certain state registered professions who practice in their own right. There are no plans to change that long established principle.

NHS Staff (Conscription)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of NHS staff, broken down into doctors, nurses, ancillary staff, etc., who would be liable were the call-up of reserve forces to become compulsory; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Mylograms

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate, region by region, the number of patients who were given a mylogram procedure with the use of myodil contrast medium, and who have subsequently requested from their district health authority full details and confirmation that the myodil contrast medium was administered; how many of the total number of those requesting information and confirmation have been provided with the information as requested; and how many requests are outstanding.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to advise district health authorities that they should allow no more than three months when dealing with individual requests from patients seeking confirmation that they were subjected to a myodil contrast medium.

Mr. Dorrell: We have not issued any guidelines as to the timescale within which health authorities should process requests for access to personal medical records. We have, however, encouraged them to deal with such requests as quickly as possible.

Management Consultants

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each district health authority, Scottish health authority, regional health authority and England as a whole the amount spent on management consultants' fees during each of the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: The employment of management consultants is a matter for individual health authorities in England and information on any expenditure incurred is not collected centrally.

Questions concerning Scottish health authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Soviet Union

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any proposals to assist the USSR to overcome the current shortage of anti-cancer drugs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The United Kingdom has not received any specific requests for unilateral aid from the USSR, but is participating in the programme of European Community humanitarian aid to the USSR agreed at the European Council in December 1990. This aid will include medical supplies and some 250 tonnes have been despatched. We do not have details of the contents of these consignments.

Food Safety

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when part II of the report of the Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food will be published.

Mr. Dorrell: Sir Mark Richmond submitted part II of his Committee's report to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. It is being published today.

In this, the final part, the Committee has examined arrangements in Scotland and Northern Ireland for red meat production, milk and milk products, fish and shellfish, transport, retailing and wholesaling, catering, the consumer and the home, education and training, and research. Part II together with part I, surveys authoritatively a wide range of microbiological safety issues and recommends technical, scientific, legal and educational measures to reduce the risk of microbiological food poisoning. In this context my colleagues and I welcome the report as a useful and constructive document. It makes many useful recommendations which we shall follow up in a positive way; and as with part I of the Committee's report, we trust that others to whom the recommendations are addressed, in particular the food industry and environmental health authorities, will similarly examine it to see how the level of food safety in this country can be further improved. We shall certainly draw it to the attention of interested bodies.

As with part I of the Committee's report, the Government have decided to publish its immediate response to the Committee's recommendations. This is set out in a paper which is being put into the Libraries.

The Government and I are most grateful to the Committee for the hard work it has put into producing both parts of the report.

The report is addressed to the Secretary of State for Health, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Scotland, the Secretary of State for Wales and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Nurses

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the average number of nurses employed by Norwich health authority who attended training courses in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available;

(2) what was the average number of (a) holidays and (b) sickness days taken by nurses employed by Norwich health authority, in each of the years 1961, 1971, 1981 and 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Michael Falcon the chairman of Norwich health authority for details.

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the date when he will issue the discussion paper on the review of inter-country adoption law; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to issue the discussion paper on inter-country adoption, which will be a paper in the Adoption Law Review series, by Easter.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he expects the effect on the recently negotiated reduction in junior doctors' hours of the call-up for Gulf or other military service of reserve medical personnel to be; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The agreement on junior doctors' hours sets out a programme of action to be implemented over the next year and beyond. It is not therefore anticipated that the call-up for military service of reserve medical personnel will have a measurable effect on this programme.

Disabled People

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria, relating to people with disabilities, will be used in the formula for calculating payments made to social service authorities for services under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 December 1990]: A major element of Government grants to local authorities is the revenue support grant, which is distributed using standard spending assessments (SSAs). These take account of each authority's social, demographic and economic characteristics, and the functions for which it is responsible. However, revenue support grant is unhypothecated and it is for local authorities to determine their own priorities.

Separate components are included in the personal social services SSA for services to people over 65 years old, to children, and to clients aged under 65 including mentally ill, mentally handicapped and physically handicapped people. Details of the criteria involved are given in "Standard Spending Assessments, Background and Underlying Methodology" published by the Department of the Environment in 1990 and available in the Library. When data from the 1991 census become available the use of a new indicator relating to long standing illness or disabilities will be considered.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which National Health Service trusts he intends to establish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1990, c. 77-82]: I am pleased to announce that I have agreed that a further 12 units who have expressed interest in trust status can proceed to work up applications to become trusts on 1 April 1992. This brings the total number of units working on second wave trust status to 123. The 12 units are:

Kendal Hospitals Unit
Eastbourne Acute Services
Parkside Community Services
Staffordshire Ambulance Services
Waltham Forest Health Services
Frenchay Acute and Community Services
Southmead Acute and Community Services
Royal United Hospital Bath
East Berkshire Mental Handicap Unit
Dudley Priority Unit
Liverpool Community, Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Services
Mersey Metropolitan Ambulance Service

Acute Beds

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all those National Health Service general hospitals by district and region which have less than 400 acute beds, giving the actual number of beds in each case.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 December 1990]: I am arranging for the table containing available information to be placed in the Library. It is not possible from central returns to identify district general hospitals separately. The tables provided list hospitals with over 50 and less than 400 beds excluding those hospitals where more than 50 per cent. of the total beds are maternity beds or beds in units of the young disabled.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the National Health Service hospitals, by region and district, which provide accident and emergency services, together with, in each case (a) the number of acute beds in the hospital, (b) the total number of beds in the hospital and (c) a list of those services normally found in a district general hospital which are not available in that particular hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 December 1990]: I am arranging for the table containing available information to be placed in the Library. The accident and emergency facilities concerned will range from simple first aid stations to departments providing the full range of accident and emergency services. No central record is held of the services available in each hospital.

SCOTLAND

Community Care

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will meet the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations to discuss availability of funding for voluntary organisations involved in community care and other matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials met representatives of the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations on 15 November 1990 to discuss the role of the voluntary sector in the provision of community care services and a further meeting will be held in January 1991. Officials are always happy to meet the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations on matters of concern to voluntary organisations. As far as funding is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 15 October 1990.

Pensioners' Electricity Charges

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Old Age Pensioners' Association for the abolition of electricity standing charges for pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Representations are received annually from the Scottish Old Age Pensioners Association on a range of topics, including the abolition of electricity standing charges. Electricity prices are determined by the public electricity suppliers, subject to the conditions on price control set out in the licences issued to them under the Electricity Act 1989. Compliance by the public electricity suppliers with those conditions and all other conditions of their licences is overseen by the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Health Board Chairmen

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the chairmen of each health board in Scotland including their political affiliations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 26 January 1989 to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) at columns 718-19, which contains as much information as is held centrally about the political affiliations of health board chairmen.

Interest Rates

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those European countries which have a lower rate of inflation than Scotland; and if he will give details of the interest rates in each of the countries listed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There is no official retail prices index (RPI) for Scotland. The table lists those European Community member states which in November 1990 had a lower inflation rate than the United Kingdom's 9·7 per cent. together with their respective average November 1990 short-term interest rates.

EC member state	Inflation[1]	Interest rates[2]
Denmark	2·2	n/a
Ireland	2·7	n/a
Netherlands	2·8	8·7
West Germany	3·0	8·8
France	3·6	10·0
Belgium	4·0	9·0
Luxembourg	4·5	n/a
Italy	6·5	12·6
Spain	6·7	14·1

[1] Percentage change on a year earlier.
[2] Nominal three-month inter-bank rates.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding he proposes to give the M E Association and the M E Action Campaign organisations, to assist them in assisting Scottish sufferers of this illness.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The M E Association is receiving grant assistance of £14,668 towards its core headquarters running costs in the current year. Its application for funding in the financial year 1991-92 is still under consideration. I have received no application for funding from the M E Action Campaign organisations.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet with representatives of the M E Association and the M E Action Campaign to discuss how best to assist sufferers in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials are in contact with the M E Association as part of the arrangements for monitoring grant aid awarded under section 10(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968.

Fishing

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sanction he expects to enforce against those Scottish fishermen who exceeded their quota in any species during 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As part of the normal arrangements for distributing internally the United Kingdom's quotas it has been agreed with the United Kingdom industry that those groups disadvantaged as a result of any other group exceeding its quota in one year will be compensated in the subsequent year with correspondingly increased quotas. These arrangements will apply to all groups which are disadvantaged irrespective of where they are based in the United Kingdom. If an individual fisherman exceeds his monthly quota then, in cases where the quota in question is managed by Fisheries Departments, a report would be made to the procurator fiscal with a view to prosecution in the courts; if the quota is managed by a producer organisation, the fisherman is subject to the discipline procedures of the organisation.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions he has exercised his powers under section 1(8) of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976; and how, following the making of a protection order, he monitors its operation to ensure the improvement of, or the giving or availability of access of, fishings under a protection order in comparison with the proposals submitted to him in terms of section 1(3)(a) of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend has no powers under section 1(8) of the 1976 Act. Responsibility for all public prosecution in Scotland rests with the Lord Advocate.

Proposers of protection orders are encouraged to set up liaison committees. Regular reports on the operation of the protection orders are sought from each liaison committee. In addition, my right hon. Friend takes into account the views of the Consultative Committee on Freshwater Fisheries and complaints or other comments by angling clubs, associations and members of the public.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy of monitoring fish landings at Scottish ports and inquiring into allegations of misreporting concerning Scottish fishing vessels during 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Landings at each of 20 major fishing ports in Scotland are monitored daily by staff of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department. Landings at other ports are monitored periodically. Confirmation of reported areas of fishing activity is sought by comparing log book entries with surveillance data provided by fishery protection vessels and aircraft. All suspected cases of misreporting are investigated thoroughly and where sufficient evidence is available, cases are submitted to the prosecuting authorities.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since inception all those protection orders made under the provisions of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976; and the body which the Secretary of State has consulted under section 1(3)(b) of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 in the case of each such protection order made.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

1976-79: None.
1980: The Rivers Tweed and Eye Protection Order 1980 (renewed in 1983, 1986 and 1988).
1981: None.
1982: The Upper Spey and Associated Waters Protection Order 1982 (renewed in 1985 and 1988).
1983: The River Tummel Catchment Area Protection Order 1983 (renewed in 1986 and 1988).
The River Lunan Catchment Area Protection Order 1983 (renewed in 1986 and 1988).
1984 and 1985: None.
1986: The River Tay Catchment Area Protection Order 1986 (renewed in 1990).

1988: The West Strathclyde Protection Order 1988.
1989: None.
1990: The River Earn Catchment Area Protection Order 1990.
The River Don Catchment Area (Part) Protection Order 1990.

My right hon. Friend has appointed a Consultative Committee on Freshwater Fisheries which is consulted under section 1(3)(b) of the 1976 Act on proposals for, and other matters relating to, protection orders.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the question of access to salmon fishings in Scotland; and whether he will include a comparative study of access to fishing in Scotland with other countries such as the Republic of Ireland and France with respect to European Community law.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have no plans to review the question of access to salmon fishings in Scotland.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those protection orders which have been varied or revoked by the Secretary of State under section 1(10) of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify the destination of all payments made by the Secretary of State under section 5 of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such payments have been made.

Fishing (Protection Orders)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those proposals for a protection order under the provisions of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 presently under consideration by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Two proposals are presently under consideration, one for Loch Awe, Loch Avich and the River Avich and the other for Loch Morar and the River Morar.

Acute Medical Services

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects to announce his decision on the Lanarkshire health board's proposals to eliminate acute medical services in Clydesdale constituency; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the projected figure for closure of acute medical services for each year from 1991 to 1994 in each health board area in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards are responsible for drawing up strategic plans for all services, including acute services. These plans may contain proposals for closures as well as for new capital investment. As strategy reviews are undertaken on a continuing basis by individual boards, it is not possible to give a full indication of new acute services developments and any consequent closures for the years 1991-1994. Lanarkshire health board is currently preparing an approval in principle submission for its acute services proposals. When this is received, I shall consider all aspects of the proposals, including the representations made by the hon. Member.

Industrial Investment

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the percentage increase in investment each year in Scotland since 1979 in real terms in (a) chemicals, (b) man-made fibres, (c) textiles, (d) clothing, (e) footwear and (f) motor vehicle manufacturing; to what extent this has resulted in an increase in capacity; what has been the increase in the demand for such goods; and whether he will publish in each case the increase in capacity since 1979, the increase in output as a percentage of 1979 and the figures for import penetration from the EEC and the rest of the world now and in 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available in the form requested.

Net capital expenditure at current prices is available from the annual census of production. The figures are set out in the table.

[1] The definition of net capital expenditure changed between 1987 and 1988. Up to 1987, contributors were asked to include annual payments for assets acquired on a financial leasing basis. From 1988, they were asked to include the total value of such assets as capital expenditure during the year in which they were acquired. This change is estimated to have increased total net capital expenditure for the United Kingdom as a whole by up to 7 per cent.

Figures are not available for demand or capacity.

Output figures in real terms are published regularly in indexed form. The following table gives an index of production series for the sectors required, at published level, scaled to 1979 = 100.

Health Board Managers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the salaries paid to each of the Scottish health boards' managers; their projected salary increase for next year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The salary ranges for Scottish Health Board General Managers effective from 1 September 1990 are set out in the table. Progression up the range is dependent on individual performance. No decisions on the salary ranges from 1 September 1991 have yet been taken.

Health board	Range
Argyll and Clyde	£46,660 to £60,650
Ayrshire and Arran	£45,570 to £59,240
Borders	£42,750 to £55,570
CSA	£45,570 to £59,240
Dumfries and Galloway	£42,750 to £55,570
Fife	£45,570 to £59,240
Forth Valley	£45,570 to £59,240
Grampian	£47,200 to £61,360
Greater Glasgow	£53,710 to £69,820
Highland	£45,570 to £59,240
Lanarkshire	£46,660 to £60,650
Lothian	£51,270 to £66,650
Orkney	£33,640 to £43,730
Shetland	£33,640 to £43,730
Tayside	£47,200 to £61,360
Western Isles	£33,640 to £43,730

Labour Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the change in (a) the number of employees in employment and (b) the number of employees in employment in manufacturing in Scotland between June 1979 and June 1990; and what the changes are in percentage terms.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The number of employees in employment in Scotland fell by 102,000 between June 1979 and June 1990, a decrease of 5 per cent. The number of manufacturing employees in employment in Scotland fell by 180,000 between June 1979 and June 1990, a decrease of 30 per cent. Although the number of employees in employment in Scotland fell between 1979 and 1990, other components of the labour force have grown, notably self-employed which have increased by 87,000. At over 2·3 million, the civilian work force in Scotland is at its highest ever level.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers of unemployed in Scotland in December 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The seasonally adjusted series of unemployment provides the only figures that are comparable over the time period requested. In December 1989, the seasonally adjusted level of unemployed claimants in Scotland was 211,200 compared with 141,500 in December 1979.

General Practice

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give the numbers both in absolute and percentage terms of general practitioners in Greater Glasgow health board who have a negative balance in their practice profile;

(2) if he will give the current expenditure by Greater Glasgow health board on reimbursement of general practitioners for ancillary staff and the projected expenditure following the introduction of practice profiles;

(3) if he will give the basis on which the practice profile is calculated in determining staff reimbursement cost for general practitioners in the Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board's allocation for the financial year ending 31 March 1991 in respect of general practitioners' ancillary staff is £7,073,000. The board has indicated in returns to the management executive that it has spent £3,610,180 to October, the latest month for which figures are available. The distrubution of these funds to individual practices, and the management of the ancillary staff scheme, are matters for Greater Glasgow health board, within the terms of the state of fees and allowances.

Asthma

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations his Department has received from Action Asthma about its work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have obtained a copy of the Action Asthma press information pack which launched the national asthma survey on 3 September 1990. I shall be interested to learn of the outcome of the survey in due course.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many open heart operations have been undertaken this year in Scotland; how many people are on waiting lists waiting for open heart operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 2,969 cardiac procedures were undertaken in Scotland between 1 October 1989 and 30 September 1990. There were 1,268 people in Scotland waiting for cardiac operations at 30

September 1990. Cardiac surgery services have been systematically expanded by the Government over recent years. Since central funding began in 1983, the number of cardiac operations performed in Scotland has increased from 1,717 to 2,518 by March 1990. This year an extra £467,000 has been provided to Greater Glasgow health board under the waiting list fund initiative to enable an additional 80 procedures to be undertaken.

Community Charge

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all categories of people who are exempt from the community charge in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The categories of persons exempted from the personal community charge in Scotland are set out in schedule 1A to the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended.

Migration

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the net civilian outmigration from Scotland in the 12 months ending June.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not yet available. It is planned that it will be published, together with the registrar-general's 1990 mid-year population estimates for Scotland, at the end of April 1991.

Hill Farmers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hill farmers there are in Scotland on a county by county basis for the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department does not collect information directly on the numbers of hill farmers in Scotland but does collect data on the numbers of holdings within the less favoured areas, which include the main hill areas. The holdings information, including an estimate for minor holdings, at June 1990 is as shown in the table.

Estimated number of holdings within less favoured areas

Region	Estimated number
Borders	1,200
Central	1,080
Dumfries and Galloway	3,580
Fife	150
Grampian	5,100
Highland	8,670
Lothian	420
Strathclyde	6,350
Tayside	1,270
Orkney	2,170
Shetland	2,650
Western Isles	5,970

Schools

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the level of expenditure on books and equipment per child in Scotland in constant prices, in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is given in the table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. Expenditure on equipment was not separately identified in these returns until 1982-83. There has been some variation from year to year in recording expenditure under the respective headings and the figures for expenditure on books may include some expenditure on equipment and vice versa.

West Lothian Hospital

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects phase II of the West Lothian district general hospital to be completed; and if he will list the medical services which will be provided in it.

Mr. Lang: The building work of phase II of the West Lothian district general hospital will be completed by this summer and will be commissioned ready for patient use by April 1992.

Present plans are to provide the following medical services:

General surgery
Orthopaedic surgery
ENT surgery
General medicine
Paediatric medicine
Gynaecology
Obstetrics
Special care baby unit
Intensive therapy unit
Coronary care unit
Plastic surgery and burns unit
Geriatric assessment
Geriatric long stay
Acute psychiatry
Psychogeriatric
General practitioner unit
Young chronic sick unit

Sandeels

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in identifying the cause of poor recruitment of sandeels in research into the Shetland sandeel population; and what evidence there is that this is due to natural factors operating in the first few months of life.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since poor recruitment to the Shetland sandeel population first occurred during a period of high spawning stock, it cannot be attributed to low egg production and must be the result of natural factors operating in the first few months of life. A research programme has been initiated to investigate the factors affecting the mortality and dispersal of larval and 0-group sandeels and the results of the first phase are currently being analysed.

The seas around Shetland are known to comprise part of an hydrographic system which can greatly influence the larval dynamics for those fish species where adequate studies have been made—for example, herring. Studies have suggested that sandeel larval abundance in that area can be affected by changing hydrographic circumstances. In addition, studies in the north- west Atlantic suggest that where stocks of pelagic predators such as herring and mackerel were reduced then there was a congruent increase in the abundance of larval sandeels. Conversely, in the north-east Atlantic herring numbers have increased dramatically in the last decade. Herring are capable of being voracious predators of sandeel larvae and the overlapping distribution of the two stocks around Shetland may be relevant to sandeel recruitment dynamics.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the distribution and abundance of 0-group, 1-group and breeding age sandeels in those areas of Shetland that have been studied in 1990, including Fair Isle, compare with surveys from previous years as revealed by research trawls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Trawl survey data from fishing grounds around Shetland, including Fair Isle, can be used to give an indication of the relative abundance of 0-group, 1-group and breeding age (2+ group) sandeels. These data are summarised in the table.

Mean numbers of sandeel caught per 30-minute survey haul from grounds off Shetland, 1984 to 1990

Year	Age
	0	1	2+
1984	891,898	47,592	48,198
1985	202,826	78,055	76,784
1986	683,044	56,653	36,878
1987	[1]—	[1]—	[1]—
1988	141,457	1,421	39,868
1989	863,181	9,283	11,974
1990	90,148	30,118	8,851

[1] No survey in 1987.

Preliminary analysis of the distribution of sandeels between the fishing grounds suggests that the distribution of 0-group fish in August 1990 was similar to that in preceding years and that the distribution of 0-group fish has changed little since the start of the surveys in 1984. Similarly, the distribution of 1-group fish is comparable to that in preceding years. The analysis suggests that the distribution of breeding age (2+) fish varies from year to year with little correlation in their distribution between years.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the main predators of 0, 1 and 2 group sandeels, respectively, in Shetland water; and what evidence Her Majesty's Government have for any changes in predation levels in the last 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The main predators on these sandeels are seabirds, seals and fish. The limited data available on changes between years do not allow firm conclusions to be made.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest estimates for the level of recruitment for the Shetland sandeel stock for each year from 1984; what estimates were available for the same year in June 1988 and June 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Levels of recruitment to the Shetland sandeel stock since 1984, as estimated by assessments made in the years 1988-90, are as follows:

Recruitment to Shetland sandeel stock, 1984-89 expressed as millions of 0-group on 1 July.

0-group recruits in year	Assessment
	1988	1989	1990
1984	29,188	27,065	21,212
1985	21,343	29,573	19,473
1986	19,451	48,955	24,924
1987	2,196	2,258	3,550
1988	20,750	1,273	6,440
1989	—	[1]—	25,327
1990	—	—	[1]—

[1] No estimate possible due to closure of fishery in second half of year.

The assessments made in 1989 and 1990 used an improved method of analysis. In 1989 and possibly also in 1990, fishing was concentrated in areas where the older fish predominate, thus changing the exploitation pattern and disrupting the assessment. Also, and in recent years assessment has been inhibited by low fishing mortality in the Shetland sandeel stock.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what would be the current size of the Shetland sandeel spawning stock, according to current stock assessment models, had there been no fishing mortality since 1982.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is a very wide number of possible models which might be used to predict spawning stock biomass in the absence of fishing mortality. A simple model which assumes recruitment in the absence of fishing is the same as that estimated to have occurred since 1982 predicts a spawning stock biomass for ages 2-5 of 23,600 tonnes in 1990.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will break down the total numbers of deaths caused by breast cancer for each year since 1979 into ages 16 to 25 years, 25 to 34 years, 35 to 44 years, 45 to 54 years, 55 to 64 years, and 65 years and over.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Telephone Taping

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate has received any requests for an inquiry into the illegal taping of a telephone conversation of the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) during May or June 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has received no such requests.

Training

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the numbers of people leaving employment training having completed (i) up to four weeks, (ii) four to 12 weeks, (iii) 12 to 26 weeks, (iv) 26 to 38 weeks, (v) 38 to 52 weeks and (vi) over 52 weeks' training in each month from January, for each of the Training Agency areas covering (a) Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll, (b) Lothian and Borders, (c) Lanarkshire, (d) Highlands and Islands, (e) Grampian and Tayside, (f) Glasgow City, (g) Central and Fife and (h) Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. Information about leavers is obtained through a survey and returns from leavers are incomplete. This survey provides data on a quarterly basis as set out below about the percentages of people leaving employment training. In considering the information it is important to bear in mind that entering permanent employment is a major reason for people ceasing to participate in employment training.

Health Service

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what honorarium is given to each member of the health boards; and how many meetings each board holds per annum.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 December 1990]: Regarding an honorarium for health board members, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Friday 6 July to the hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) at column 733. Each health board meets as often as it finds necessary to conduct its business, but procedural regulations require meetings to be held not less than once every three months. Members are also involved in meetings of committees and working parties and they serve on a variety of appeal panels.

WALES

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusion he has reached on the expression of interest received from Pembrokeshire district health authority for national health service trust status.

Mr. David Hunt: I have invited the health authority to proceed to work up and submit an application to become a trust on the basis set out in its expression of interest.

National Curriculum

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish for consultation the draft orders with attainment targets and programmes of study for history and geography in the national curriculum.

Mr. David Hunt: I have published today for consultation draft orders with associated documents setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for history and geography in the national curriculum as required by section 21(3) of the Education Reform Act 1988. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Advertising

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) further to his answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 11 December, Official Report, columns 332-33, if he will list against each Department and area of responsibility within his Department (a) the expenditure relevant to that department or responsibility in respect of press advertising, (b) the expenditure for television advertising and (c) the figure for other advertising and promotion;

(2) whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio and (c) other advertising and promotions in respect of (1) health; (2) education, (3) agriculture, (4) the Valleys initiative, (5) employment and economic issues, (6) promotion of tourism and (7) environmental issues;

(3) if he will list the 10 most expensive items of expenditure within each of the headings of press advertising, television advertising and other advertising and promotion by his Department in each of the last three years;

(4) if he will list the publicity campaigns that have been undertaken by his Department in each of the last three years and the sums spent on each in respect of (a) press advertising, (b) television advertising and (c) other forms of advertising and promotion on each.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answers 17-20 December 1990]: A detailed breakdown of expenditure by the Welsh Office on advertising and promotion in 1989-90 is set out in table 1.

Table 2 provides comparable information in respect of the 10 most expensive items/campaigns undertaken in that year.

Equivalent breakdowns for the years prior to 1989-90 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Village Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the local management of primary schools, with particular reference to the future management and continuation of small village schools in rural Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local management of schools was introduced for the benefit of all schools. The arrangements enable the local education authorities to take account of disproportionately high costs faced by small schools where they consider it appropriate to do so. Accordingly, rural schools need face no greater threat to their existence under LMS than they did from previous funding arrangements.

As regards the future management of small schools, we have recently consulted LEAs and others about extending delegation of responsibility for managing their budget share to all primary schools by 1 April 1994.

Rural Housing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to increase the provision of housing for young people in rural Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Gentleman today.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums of money within his Department's budgets for (a) press advertising, (b) television, (c) radio and (d) other activities of promotion and publicity have been related to tackling the problem of alcohol misuse in each of the last five years and in the present financial year; what percentage this constitutes of the finances available under each heading; and what percentage the total for each year represents of his Department's total publicity budget for that year.

Mr. David Hunt: Funding is made available from the Welsh Office to a number of agencies and organisations for the promotion of sensible drinking habits. It is not possible centrally to identify separate publicity activities.

Cardiff Bay

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the latest estimated cost of the Cardiff bay barrage, including the initial design and consultancy costs and the costs to his Department of the Bill and its subsequent passage through the House;

(2) what are the latest figures for public loans, grants and subsidies to the Cardiff Bay development corporation from the beginning of the project to its completion.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest estimates of the cost of the development strategy for Cardiff bay, including the proposed barrage, were contained in the letter of 13 December 1990 from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The costs of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill have been met by Cardiff Bay development corporation and no significant additional costs have been incurred by my Department.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the number of new jobs which will be created by the works currently being undertaken by the Cardiff Bay development corporation; and if he will list these new jobs by category of employment;

(2) what is the estimated number of new jobs which will result from the works currently being undertaken by the Cardiff Bay development corporation (a) if a barrage is constructed and (b) if a barrage is not constructed; and if he will list the jobs, by category of employment, which will be created if a barrage is constructed.

Mr. David Hunt: The works currently being undertaken by Cardiff Bay development corporation are aimed primarily at bringing land forward for development by the private sector, whose projects will create employment. It is therefore not meaningful to link the creation of permanent jobs with specific activities of the corporation.

The economic appraisal of the development strategy estimated that the following numbers of jobs would be created after 15 to 20 years:

Type of development	with barrage	without barrage
B1 (Use class B1)	18,050	7,950
Industrial	1,050	1,850
Retail	3,900	2,850
Leisure	2,350	450
	25,350	13,100
Job Losses	500	400
Total	24,850	12,700

In addition, it is estimated that the following indirect jobs, that is those created through the supply of goods and services to the newly developed areas as well as induced jobs, those arising through the spending of those newly employed in the area and as a result of the indirect employment, would be created.

	Direct (net)	Indirect	Total
With barrage	24,850	7,450	32,300
Without barrage	12,700	3,800	16,500

River Taff (Sewage Discharges)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated tonnage of raw sewage and partly treated sewage released into the River Taff and its tributaries by sewage treatment plants in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what is the projected tonnage for 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available. I understand that most of the raw or partially treated sewage discharged into the River Taff is from emergency or storm sewer overflows. The operation of such overflows and volumns discharged vary according to weather conditions. The consented volumes of discharges and the results of sampling of controlled waters undertaken by the National Rivers Authority are entered on to public registers maintained by the authority.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are to be taken to stop the flow of raw effluent into the River Taff and its tributaries from sewage treatment plants working in that catchment area.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority and those discharging the effluent. I have asked the NRA to write to the hon. Gentleman on this matter.

Funerals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward legislation to amend the Town and Country Planning (Use Clauses) Order, S.I. (1987), No. 764, so as to exclude chapels of rest, mortuaries and funeral parlours from the category of "Director of Funerals" in class A1.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This matter was considered as part of the review which preceded the 1987 order and it was decided to make no change.

NHS Employees

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 13 December, Official Report, column 508, he will place in the Library a copy of the advice to employees on their duty to avoid any conflict of interest between their responsibilities as national health service employees and their private and commercial interests, or a full summary of guidance that has been given to employees, which employees are expected to observe pending the publication of any fresh and authoritative advice by his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Advice given to staff is essentially a matter for individual health authorities as employers.

Existing departmental guidance which is of long standing is limited to a statement of principle as regards the expected conduct of staff in connection with the acceptance of gifts and hospitality and the pursuit of private transactions with contractors and other suppliers of goods to the NHS. The new central guidance now being prepared will update and expand upon those principles and will set out general rules to be followed in circumstances where the private interests of employees may conflict with their public duties or where the suspicion of such a conflict may arise.

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the sums of money from all sources which he is making available directly from his Department or in conjunction with others to the Welsh National Opera in the present financial year; what were the comparable figures in 1989-90; and if he will list the projected figures for 1991-92 and subsequent years insofar as firm or tentative projections have been made;

(2) what discussions have taken place between Welsh Office Ministers, or officials and the Welsh National Opera on finances; what differences have arisen over the financial contribution of Government to the Welsh National Opera; and what differences still remain;

(3) if he will make a full statement on financial arrangements for the Welsh National Opera in the present financial year and in 1991 and future financial years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh National Opera company is funded jointly by the Arts Council of Great Britain and the Welsh Arts Council, which is itself a committee of the Arts Council of Great Britain and is funded by them. The Arts Council of Great Britain is funded by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts about the financial position of the Welsh National Opera company.

We have received representations both from representatives of the Welsh National Opera company direct and from others on its behalf about the implications of the Arts Council of Great Britain's decision not to give the company a grant from the enhancement fund in 1991-92. We are informed that further discussions are planned between the company and the Arts Council of Great Britain. We welcome this and hope for a satisfactory outcome.

Health Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will order an investigation into Powys health authority's recent inability to find money to buy wardrobes for long stay patients on ward D at Bronllys.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. This is a matter for Powys health authority, which advises that the residents on Defynnog ward have individual wardrobes.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he intends to make to the level of finances he will give to health authorities in Wales and the way the cash is distributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend is considering the changes needed to bring the distribution of resources to health authorities in Wales in line with the new arrangements introduced by the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. The service was consulted on proposals for capital funding last year and consideration is now being given to the detail of their implementation. A consultation paper on options for a new revenue formula was issued last week and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The level of funding required by health authorities in Wales is determined each year in the context of public expenditure plans and my right hon. Friend will be making an announcement in due course on the allocations to health authorities for the next financial year.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the increase of £183 million in expenditure on the national health service in Wales, announced in his Department's press release of 12 December, includes the £11 million to be found from cuts and income generation schemes which he refers to in the same press release.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I am most grateful to the hon. Gentleman for the opportunity to clarify the position.

The expected £11 million from cost improvements and income generation is in addition to the £183 million increase in Welsh Health Spending announced in December last year. The NHS in Wales will therefore benefit from both the record cash increase and the internally generated funds in its continuing drive to put the interests of patients first and deliver the highest possible standard of care.

It is, or course, wrong and misleading to refer to genuine efficiency savings as cuts.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the last three financial years, the current financial year and the next financial year (a) the forecast of health service inflation which was being made by his Department when the announcement of provision for each of the above years was made, (b) the actual level of health service inflation for each year for which it is known and his latest estimate for 1990-91, (c) the forecast of general inflation made by the Government and at the nearest available date to the announcement referred to in (a) above and (d) the actual level of general inflation for each of the years for which it is known and his latest estimate for 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: When notifying health authorities of their cash allocations each year, the Department informs authorities of the forecast level of general inflation which has been given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement. For the years 1987-88 to 1990-91 these forecasts were:

	Per cent.
1987-88	3·75
1988-89	4·5
1989-90	5·0
1990-91	5·0

Authorities are also advised that they should make prudent provision for pay and price rises within the cash allocation which they receive. While the announcement of allocations for 1991-92 has yet to be made, the forecast level of general inflation next year, as announced by the Chancellor in his autumn statement is 6 per cent.

The cash increases provided to health authorities at the start of the year exceeded the Chancellor's forecasts. In addition, authorities have received, during the course of each financial year, additional recurrent funding to meet the excess cost (over and above the level of forecast inflation) of review bodies' pay awards (for doctors, dentists, nurses and midwives and for the professions allied to medicine). In 1988-89, authorities also receive additional recurring funds to meet the cost of the clinical nurses regrading review.

Information relating to the actual level of pay and price inflation experienced by Welsh health authorities is not available centrally. This will vary from authority to authority depending on the proportion and composition of their spending on pay and non pay expenditure. However, information is compiled by the Department of Health on the actual overall level of inflation experienced within hospital and community health services' expenditure in England and for the period 1987-88 to 1989-90 the figures were:

	Per cent
1987-88	8·5
1988-89	10·5
1989-90	7·3

An equivalent figure for 1990-91 is not yet available.

The information requested on the actual level of general inflation in the years 1987-88 to 1989-90, together with the latest estimated for 1990-91, is as follows:

	Per cent
1987-88	5·45
1988-89	7·30
1989-90	6·37
[1]1990-91	8·00

[1]estimate

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the last three financial years, the current financial year and the next financial year (1) the total amount of direct Welsh Office funds, not including cost savings or income generation, allocated to each district health authority in Wales and for each special health authority in Wales and (2) the total expenditure authorised by his Department for each district health authority and special health authority in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested regarding the total allocations (ie revenue and capital) made to each district health authority in Wales and to the two special health authorities in the period 1987-88 to 1990-91 is provided in the table. Allocations to health authorities and to the two special health authorities for 1991-92 will be announced later this month.

Health authorities have a statutory responsibility to contain their cash expenditure within their notified cash allocations. In the event that an authority's cash spending exceeds its attributable resources, the resultant overspending is retrospectively legitimised by an increase in allocation to cover the overspend. The overspending is recovered in the subsequent financial year when a reduction, equivalent to the level of the previous years' overspend, is made to the allocation of the authority concerned.

[1] Notified allocation as at 9 January.

[2] A further allocation of up to £0·3 million is available to the Health Promotion Authority for Wales, against which they may submit bids for specific developments in 1990-91.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing what proportion of the money spent (a) by the Welsh Office itself and (b) by each health authority in Wales on training for members of the new health authority boards went on food and accommodation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) on 5 December 1990 at column 151 two events have been held at the all-Wales level. The costs of these have in the main been met by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority on behalf of the health service in Wales. Details are as follows:

	Total cost £	Food/ accommodation £
October briefing event	[1]24,128	[1]7,511
November event	16,655	10,055

[1] Excludes accommodation costs of delegates met by individual health authorities.

The Department does not keep records of training costs incurred at the local level by health authorities.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the amount that Powys health authority is spending on new flagpoles; and if he will order an investigation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Powys health authority advises that there are no plans to purchase new flagpoles.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those projects which constitute the £800 million to be spent under the valleys initiative, indicating (a) what proportion of that sum will fall directly on his Department's vote and (b) the amount of money to be spent on each project in each year covered by the £800 million total.

Mr. David Hunt: Provision for the programme for the valleys area over the five years from June 1988 to March 1993 is about £800 million. It covers a wide variety of programmes and it is not possible to list the individual projects except at disproportionate cost.

A breakdown of outturn for 1988-89 to 1990-91 and of provision for 1991-93 for the different categories of expenditure is shown in the following table.

Seventy per cent. of the £781·709 million falls within my Department's vote.

Small Firms Counselling Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the future of the small firms counselling service in (a) the county of Clwyd and (b) Wales; and how many small firms counsellors there are in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the small firms service will transfer to the Training and Enterprise councils in Wales on 1 April. The service in Clwyd will be the responsibility of the North East Wales and North West Wales TECs. There are currently 40 small firms counsellors in Wales.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money local authorities have used from the proceeds of council housing sales to repay Government debt.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is not available centrally.

Homelessness

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government propose any further assistance to Ealing in respect of short-term leases relating to homeless people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's decisions on housing revenue account subsidy in 1991-92 were announced on 19 December. We propose to make available additional subsidy of up to £25 million in 1991-92 towards the costs of renewal and replacement of existing short term leases. £2,082,375 of this would be for Ealing.

Housing Associations

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached about future grant arrangements for special needs provision by housing associations.

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect on the provision of move-on housing in rented buildings of the recently announced revenue support from new special needs schemes in other than housing action group-funded buildings; what particular consideration he has given to the implications for people with special needs requiring accommodation to live independently in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he intends to make a statement on the future funding of hostels providing special needs accommodation;

(2) if he will review his decision to exclude health authority, Department of Social Security, Home Office and other externally funded projects from entitlement to hostel deficit grant and special needs management allowance.

Sir George Young: New capital and revenue grant arrangements are to be introduced from April 1991 on the basis of proposals prepared by a joint working party comprising representatives of the Department, the Housing Corporation and the National Federation of Housing Associations. The effect will be to establish a clearer and more cost-effective framework for the future funding of special needs provision by housing associations. The arrangements will, however, need to be kept under review in the light of developments on community care.

A new flat-rate special needs management allowance (SNMA) will replace the present hostel deficit grant (HDG) for new schemes from April 1991. Schemes already in receipt of HDG and eligible for SNMA will be transferred to SNMA by steps over a period of five years starting from April 1992.

The SNMA rate for 1991-92 will be £2,000 per bedspace (1989-90 prices, to be revalued to 1991-92 prices). The allowance will be available for special needs provision in self-contained as well as shared accommodation.

On the capital side, special needs schemes will from April 1991 be brought within the fixed housing association grant (HAG) arrangements which already apply to general needs schemes but will be eligible for grant at 100 per cent. of approved cost.

The Housing Corporation will be carrying out formal consultations on a new determination under the Housing Act 1988 to bring SNMA into effect from this April. It will at the same time prepare and consult on detailed guidance for associations both on SNMA and on the changes in the capital grant arrangements.

I have also considered whether SNMA should be subject to the same restrictions on eligibility as were announced for HDG by my hon. Friend, the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) when he was Minister for Housing and Planning on 8 November at columns 14-15. I have concluded that these restrictions, in particular to schemes capital funded through the corporation, must in the main continue but that, subject to the availability of resources, the corporation should be able to consider for SNMA certain categories of schemes which do not require HAG. These are schemes capital funded by a charitable organisation, leased schemes and schemes using existing housing association accommodation no longer required for general needs. In supporting such schemes the corporation will need to ensure that its SNMA commitments are contained within provision for current and future years. It will also wish to satisfy itself that the scheme meets the priorities established for its approved development programme and is not tied to meeting the requirements of another organisation through, for example, exclusive nomination rights.

Associations which had applications for HDG budget approval awaiting decision by the corporation at the time of the 8 November announcement will be able to re-submit under the new SNMA arrangements any of those schemes which they consider meet the SNMA eligibility criteria.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the arrangements for notice and the actual notice given by the last chairman of the London Docklands development corporation prior to his resignation; and how much severance pay and pension entitlement he received.

Mr. Key: Chairmen and members of public bodies are public appointees and are not normally required to give notice if they resign.

The previous chairman of the LDDC, Sir Christopher Benson, did not resign but completed his appointment in the normal way.

It is not Government policy to disclose the individual pension arrangements for members of public bodies.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance the Government are giving Nottinghamshire county council to meet additional expenditure incurred following the bad weather; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: We currently have no information to suggest that Nottinghamshire county council incurred costs greater than those which it could be expected to meet as part of its normal responsibilities for coping with winter weather. But we will consider any request for assistance made by Nottinghamshire or any other local authority.

Rates Defaulters

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has as to the level of summonses issued for defaulters on (a) domestic and (b) industrial and commercial rates at the latest convenient date to December 1989.

Mr. Key: From information collected by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy we estimate that 1·4 million summonses were issued by rating authorities in England in 1989-90. No information is available on the split between domestic and non-domestic ratepayers.

Homelessness

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of people living in bed and breakfast accommodation who were the responsibility of the London borough of Wandsworth on 14 December.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities have a statutory duty to secure accommodation for households who have been found to be homeless, or threatened with homelessness, under part III of the Housing Act 1985. Information is reported quarterly to the Department. The latest available figures for the number of homeless households in bed and breakfast accommodation are for the end of September 1990. The reported figures, including those for the London borough of Wandsworth, appear in table 7 of "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the third quarter 1990. Supplementary Tables". A copy is in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will issue advice to local housing authorities on the way in which the provisions of part XII of the Housing Act 1985 should be exercised having regard to homelessness outside London;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to exercise his powers under sections 322 to 326, inclusive, of the Public Health Act 1936 to enforce the provisions of part XII of the Housing Act 1985 where a local authority, in response to applications for short-term night shelter by charities and churches, was choosing not to exercise these powers;

(3) if he will make it his policy not to exercise his powers under sections 322 to 326, inclusive, of the Public Health Act 1936 to enforce the provisions of part XII of the Housing Act 1985 where a local authority, in response to applications for short-term night shelters by charities and churches, is sensitively choosing not to exercise these powers.

Mr. Yeo: The Department's advice to local authorities on the use of their powers under part XII of the Housing Act 1985 is contained in DOE circular 12/86. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to revise that advice or to exercise his powers under sections 322 to 326 of the Public Health Act 1936.

Humber Estuary

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to designate the Humber estuary a Ramsar site and a special protection site under the European Community directive.

Mr. Baldry: I cannot forecast when the Humber estuary will be designated. As is the case with a number of sites currently being considered by Government, officials are seeking to identify apparent problems or conflicts of interest that need to be examined, in the light of the scientific evidence put forward by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Community Charge (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what future financial help for the year 1991-92 will be given to the London borough of Wandsworth in assisting the authority towards its community charge.

Mr. Key: Under our proposed settlement for 1991-92 Wandsworth will receive revenue support grant, payments from the national non-domestic rate pool, inner London education grant and area protection grant totalling nearly £1,200 per adult compared with an inner London average for 1991-92 of £1,392.

Housing Investment Figures

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he issued the latest housing investment programme figures; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 December 1990 to the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) at col. 463-64.

Housing (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present number of either flats or houses belonging to the London Borough of Wandsworth which were empty on the 14 December.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information on empty council dwellings relates to 1 April 1990 and was provided by the London borough of Wandsworth in their April 1990 housing investment programme return (HIP1), a copy of which is in the Library.

Rental Accommodation

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy towards the building by local authorities of rental accommodation.

Sir George Young: It is for local authorities to determine their own priorities for housing capital expenditure within the resources available. However, we have encouraged them to concentrate on the improvement of their own stock and on assistance to private owners with grants. The Government's policy is that housing associations should be the main providers of new subsidised homes for rent, with local authorities fulfilling a mainly enabling role.

Privatisations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the privatisations with which his Department has been involved since 1979, indicating in each case the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 14 December 1990]: My Department was involved with the privatisation of the water and sewerage companies in England and Wales. The sale took place in 1989. The estimated net proceeds will be £3,454 million. The estimated current value of the partly paid shares in the companies is £5·7 billion.

Refuse-derived Fuel

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the Government intend to encourage the development and use of refuse-derived fuel.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

Municipal and industrial refuse are major potential sources of energy and my Department's policy is to encourage the use of waste as a fuel wherever it is economically viable and environmentally acceptable. My Department is undertaking a substantial programme of research and development aimed at overcoming the difficulties associated with the handling, storing and burning of refuse-derived fuel (RDF). At present there are 12 current RDF R and D projects with a total contract value of £1·3 million. In addition the non-fossil fuel obligation will help the RDF industry to enter the market for electricity generation; there were two such projects included in the initial tranche of the NFFO.

Arrangements for the second tranche were announced on 19 December. It will be brought forward in 1991 and it is the Government's intention to include in that tranche a separate band reserved for municipal and general industrial waste incineration projects, which will include refuse-derived fuel.

Gipsy Site

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what undertakings he gave to the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare about informing him of the date and place of the local inquiry into the application by Avon county council for a gipsy caravan site at Box Bush lane, Hewish, Weston-super-Mare; when he notified objectors and others of these facts; when he expects to inform the hon. Member for Weston-super-Mare of these facts; and what steps he will take to ensure that ministerial undertakings are adhered to in the future.

Sir George Young: On 4 December 1989 my hon. Friend, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, undertook to inform the hon. Member of the date of the inquiry. Objectors and others who made representations were notified on 30 November 1990. It is regretted that my hon. Friend was not notified at the same time. He was notified on 20 December 1990 when details of the inquiry were included in a letter responding to points he raised on 13 November 1990 about the need for an inquiry into the proposals.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent assessment he has made of the extent of pesticide and other chemical contamination of groundwater sources as a result of the operation of dilute and disperse landfill sites; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to conduct a survey of all dilute and disperse waste sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department is currently conducting a survey of the effect of landfill sites on groundwater quality in England and Wales. The survey will include the type of site to which the hon. Member refers.

Sulphur Dioxide

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the Iiasa data on sulphur dioxide emissions provided to the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe.

Mr. Baldry: The International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis (IIASA) recently published projections of future sulphur dioxide emissions through to the year 2000 as part of their acid rain project. Projections of energy demand and fuel use need to take into account a range of factors which are subject to constant change and are difficult to predict. The IIASA projections have not taken into account for example the recent changes of policy in some eastern European countries and the European Community's large combustion plants directive.

Water Companies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer on 18 December, Official Report, column 116, what notice water companies will be required to take of any guidelines produced by the Director of Water Services following the current consultative process and what sanctions are available (a) to him, (b) to the Director of Water Services and (c) to consumers if the guidelines and criteria are disregarded.

Mr. Baldry: Water companies have powers to fix charges and make charges schemes under sections 75 and 76 of the Water Act 1989. Although each company has discretion about how it structures its charges, it is required by condition E of its instrument of appointment (licence) "to ensure that no undue preference is shown to, and that there is no undue discrimination against, any class of customers or potential customers".

It is the responsibility of the Director General of Water Services to ensure that each company complies with the conditions of its licence.

The Secretaries of State for the Environment and Wales and the director general have duties under section 7(3) to ensure that the interests of all customers are protected. It is the duty of the director general to keep under review matters relating to the carrying out of their functions by water companies. However, the Secretaries of State may give general directions indicating the considerations to which the director general should have regard in determining the order of priority in which matters are to be brought under review.

Following the consultation, the director general will draw up general guidelines for companies to consider in drawing up their charges and charging schemes. These guidelines are likely to cover both issues on which the director general has legal powers and other, broader issues on which the consultation paper has given customers an opportunity to contribute to a public debate about future policy.

Should a company fix charges or make charges schemes which appear to the director general to contravene its licence conditions, he can take enforcement action under section 20 of the Act. If he considers that any actions of the company operate against the public interest, he may refer the matter to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, so that it can consider modifications to the conditions of the company's licence.

Enforcement of licence conditions is a matter for the director general. However, an individual customer may seek judicial review if he thinks that the director general has failed to take appropriate action. Finally a customer may challenge a company in the courts if he considers a charge levied by the company has not been properly determined by reference to a charges scheme.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Radiation (Compensation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 194, if he will make a statement on his conclusions about a no-fault compensation scheme for service-related personnel who have been exposed to nuclear radiation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Officials have now largely concluded their studies into this matter. I hope to make a statement in the near future.

The Gulf

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments and simulations there have been of the effect upon the environment of Saddam Hussein's threat to blow up Kuwaiti oil installations in the event of war; and if he will put the results in the Library.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has commissioned any research on the ecological effects of a war in the Gulf; and which sources of information already available he has used on this issue.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Decommissioning

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to announce decommissioning of HMS Valiant, HMS Courageous, HMS Swiftsure and HMS Sovereign.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend announced on 25 July at column 471 that we intend to maintain a submarine fleet of about 16 boats in the future, of which around three-quarters would be nuclear powered. Following the decisions to decommission Warspite, Churchill and Conqueror, we are considering the further steps needed to achieve the revised force level. Decisions will be announced as they are taken.

Glen Garry Transmitter

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the full cost of development of the experimental extremely low frequency transmitter to be built at Glen Garry, to date.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our policy to release details of expenditure on specific research programmes.

HMS Resolution

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if HMS Resolution is to undergo a fourth refit.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the electoral registration percentage for service men in each of the last three years in the Royal Navy, the Army and the Royal Air Force; and what is the cost of running the three district electoral register offices for each of the services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The electoral registration percentage for service men in each of the last three years is as follows:

	1988 per cent.	1989 per cent.	1990 per cent.
Royal Navy[1]	—	—	75
Army	63·5	64	65
Royal Air Force	42·0	48	53

[1] It is not possible to give an accurate figure for 1988 and 1989, though it is believed that for both years it was around 75 per cent.

The estimated running costs of the electoral registration offices in 1990-91 are as follows:

Royal Navy	15,350
Army	29,700
Royal Air Force	26,000

Loch Lochy Listening Post

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has reconsidered his intention to establish an extremely low frequency listening post on Sron A'Choire Ghairbh beside Loch Lochy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 19 February 1990 at column 573.

Iraq (Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the defence implications for United Kingdom service men of (1) the involvement of scientists and engineers employed by Man Technologie of West Germany in assisting Iraq in developing centrifuges for enriching uranium to military grade;

(2) the sale by the French-based company Gachot to Iraq of militarily sensitive valves and vacuum pumps;

(3) uranium sales by Portugal to Iraq;

(4) the sale to Iraq by Leybold-Meraus of Cologne of valves which can be used in the manufacture of a uranium enrichment centrifuge capable of making weapons grade highly enriched uranium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We continue to assess that Iraq is not currently capable of constructing a nuclear explosive device, notwithstanding recent allegations regarding imports of various materials and items of equipment.

NATO Operations and Plans

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all NATO operations and plans designed for internal security purposes in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other NATO countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on operational matters of this nature. NATO does not, however, have a role in internal security matters.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to take a final decision in respect of the disposal of HMS Dreadnought.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to my answer to the hon. Member of 13 December 1990, Official Report, column 505.

Northern Ireland

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider providing financial compensation for Ministry of Defence employees working in Northern Ireland similar to that provided for civilians working in a temporary capacity at Ministry of Defence locations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Ministry of Defence civilian staff based temporarily in Northern Ireland receive allowances designed to reimburse the additional costs incurred as a result of living away from their normal place of residence. It would not be appropriate to make similar payments to staff permanently resident in Northern Ireland who do not have similar financial commitments.

EMPLOYMENT

Deaf Trainees

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Training Agency has researched the use of the communication support services for deaf trainees; and if he will make it his policy that the provision of these services will be maintained by the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: My Department has conducted no formal research specifically into the use of communication support services for deaf trainees. Training and enterprise councils are required to provide a communication service for deaf trainees, together with other relevant support to trainees with disabilities where appropriate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Marriage Breakdown

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the full annual cost to the Government of marriage breakdown.

Mr. John Patten: Detailed research on which to base a firm estimate is not available. We are presently considering an estimate that RELATE—formerly the National Marriage Guidance Council—has drawn up based on its own work. It is likely that considerable further research and verification would be necessary before this could be used as a definitive basis for calculation.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the statement by the deputy commissioner of the Metropolitan police on the force's strategy for 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am placing copies of the strategy statement for 1991, which I fully endorse, in the Library today. I am also sending copies to all right hon. and hon. Members whose constituencies fall wholly or partly within the Metropolitan police district. I am inviting London Members to discuss the statement with me.

ENVIRONMENT

Refuse Disposal and Collection

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take with regard to circular 13/88 and the matter of charges for the collection of waste from mixed hereditaments.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that some local authorities have not fully complied with the advice given by my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Boscawen) on 4 July 1990.

This guidance recognised that some of the waste from a composite property arises from the residential part of the property. My hon. Friend advised that the most sensible way for local authorities to treat such properties under their existing powers is that, once they have received a request to collect commercial waste from such properties, they should collect or empty free of charge at least one refuse sack or dustbin per week per property. They should also be prepared to consider alternative or additional arrangements on an individual basis.

It is our intention to revise the Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988 to which circular 13/88 relates. The revision will take account of the changes brought about by the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and we shall take the opportunity to clarify the advice to local authorities about the treatment of refuse collection from composite hereditaments. However, no local authority should use our plans to revise the regulations as an excuse for delaying implementation of the policy that I have described.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has on (a) the lowest and (b) the highest United Kingdom refuse disposal costs per tonne;

(2) what information he has on (a) the lowest and (b) the highest United Kingdom refuse collection costs per tonne;

(3) what information he has on the cost of United Kingdom refuse collection to local authorities;

(4) what information he has on the cost of United Kingdom refuse disposal to local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: The costs of waste collection and disposal vary widely depending on the type of waste, method of collection or disposal, and proximity of disposal facilities. The Department has no information about highest and lowest costs, and the latest published figures for average costs are for 1986-87. These are set out in the table.

	total £ million	per tonne £
Gross revenue expenditure on waste disposal by local authorities in England and Wales	270	10
Gross revenue expenditure on waste collection by local authorities in England and Wales	515	29

The information should be treated with caution both because estimates of waste tonnage are not always reliable, and because the response rate from local authorities was very poor. Figures for later years cannot be produced because the base data are insufficiently reliable. The Department is currently reviewing the availability of waste statistics as a whole.

Water Charges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 18 December, Official Report, c. 116, (a) what definition of undue discrimination is to be used in drawing up guidelines on water charges and

(b) if he will list the various classes of customers and potential customers for whom protection against such discrimination is to be provided.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him yesterday.

Crown Offices

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any covenants or other restrictions on the Crown offices in Crown way, Cathays, Cardiff, which would prevent their use by (a) Government Departments other than the Welsh Office and (b) non-Government users or bodies.

Mr. Yeo: The freehold of the Crown Offices in Crown way, Cathays, Cardiff is vested in the Secretary of State for the Environment. The conveyances contain restrictive covenants limiting the use of the premises for the purpose of Government Offices.

Environment Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 20 and 21 December 1990.

Mr. Trippier: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

The Council agreed a new regulation for the control of substances that deplete the ozone layer. This is necessary to implement within the Community the revision of the Montreal protocol which was agreed in London last June, but it also demonstrates our commitment to the protection of the ozone layer by requiring a faster phase-out within the Community. Under the regulation, chlorofluorocarbons will be cut by 85 per cent. by the middle of 1995 and phased out by the middle of 1997—two and a half years in advance of the Montreal protocol requirements. Halons are to be cut by 50 per cent. by the start of 1995, and phased out by the end of the century. Carbon tetrachloride will be phased out by 1998, and 1,1,1-trichloroethane by 2005. In certain cases exemptions for essential uses, such as medical aerosols and some fire-fighting applications, may be permitted, should those prove necessary. I pressed at the Council for an even quicker phase-out of CFCs and halons. Nonetheless, the agreement reached is a major step forward in protecting the ozone layer, and sends a strong signal to the rest of the world that still faster cuts than those agreed in London can be achieved.

The United Kingdom worked actively to secure agreement in the Council of a common position on the proposal for a consolidated directive on car emissions. The strict new standards it contains would come into effect from the end of 1992. They would require the fitting of three-way catalysts to all new cars, and would reduce pollution from each car to about a quarter of present levels. The Council also agreed to invite the European Commission to produce a proposal for a further round of yet stricter standards which could come into effect from 1996. This is excellent news for Europe's environment and confirms the Community's determination to come to grips with pollution from transport. It is also good news for the motor industry, which will now have a much clearer idea of the standards towards which it should engineer.

The Council agreed a directive on hazardous waste to replace the existing directive on toxic and dangerous waste which dates from 1978. The new directive's most important feature is a provision for defining hazardous waste in a clear, practical way. Before the directive comes into force a list of hazardous wastes will be drawn up. Other features of the new directive are controls on the mixing and movement of hazardous waste. The new directive will be implemented by means of the proposed revision of the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980.

A regulation establishing a programme of action for the protection of the Mediterranean sea was agreed. The programme, known as MEDSPA, will provide pump-priming funds for a range of actions to help deal with the serious environmental problems affecting the Mediterranean.

The Council also agreed a resolution welcoming the European Commission's recent green paper on the urban environment. The resolution notes that, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, the primary responsibility for protecting the urban environment lies with local, regional and national authorities, but recognises that in certain areas there may be a role for the Community to play. The Council has invited the Commission to establish a group of experts to advise on possible further action.

Proposed directives on sewage treatment and on the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances were both discussed in detail. Very good progress was made in each case on resolving a number of outstanding issues, and Ministers expressed the hope that agreement could be reached on both directives at the next Council meeting.

With support from a number of member states, I was able to secure from the European Commission a commitment to review the operation of certain aspects of the existing directive on the protection of wild birds. In particular, the Commission agreed to look at those provisions in the directive that impede action against certain pest species for which control measures are necessary, and where this would not endanger the conservation of the species. This is a welcome recognition on the Commission's part of the need to address an anomaly which has caused some concern here.

The Council also held brief discussions on climate change, on the use of economic instruments to achieve environmental objectives, and on the site of the European Environment Agency.

Rural Development Commission Factories

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on the disposal of the Rural Development Commission factory estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Rural Development Commission and its predecessors have funded a very successful programme of workspace provision over many years. Following the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 23 April, I have sought the advice of the Rural Development Commission on the disposal of its portfolio. The RDC portfolio has a number of special characteristics, among them the fact that many of the factory units that have been provided are in small blocks in remote rural areas. I am pleased to announce that having received the Rural Development Commission's advice, I have decided to proceed with the sale of the portfolio. Government policy is to encourage suitable premises and sites to be made available through the private sector to new and expanding enterprises in rural areas. The sale of the estate is intended to further this policy by involving the private sector in the ownership and management of property in rural areas. It also builds on the existing policy of selling units to tenants in appropriate circumstances. I propose to introduce a new grants scheme to encourage private developers to make further provision while at the same time withdrawing progressively from direct provision to complement this. The twin objectives of maximising the return to the taxpayer from the sale and encouraging the involvement of a range of private sector interests will best be met through a phased sale, with the intention that this should be spread over a period of about three years with the rate of disposal adjusted to market conditions.

Wherever it is practical to do so, and in line with the above objectives I have asked the Rural Development Commission and English Estates to offer existing tenants an opportunity to bid for their premises.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the rate support grant supplementary report for 1989-90 for England will be published.

Mr. Heseltine: I have laid the supplementary report before the House today. The main purpose of the report is to correct the effects of an error in respect of road lengths in the London borough of Croydon used in the calculation of its grant-related expenditure assessments for 1989-90.

The report requires the approval of the House. Subject to that, I propose to make the revisions to grant payments to reflect the report early in April. Copies of the report and tables showing revised rate support grant entitlements are being sent today to local authority associations and to each authority.

TRANSPORT

Drink Drivers

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the comparative reductions and levels of over-the-limit alcohol in dead drivers from 1982 in Great Britain, New South Wales and Sweden.

Mr. Chope: The table shows, for all drivers and riders killed whose blood alcohol level was known, the proportion who were over the legal limit. Comparative data for Sweden are not available.

	Legal limit mg/100ml	1982 Per cent.	1983 Per cent.	1984 Per cent.	1985 Per cent.	1986 Per cent.	1987 Per cent.	1988 Per cent.	1989 Per cent.

New South Wales	50(1)	40	36	33	33	34	32	31	33

The following table shows, for all drivers and riders killed whose blood alcohol level was known, the proportion who were over the level specified. The figures are for Great Britain only. Comparative data for Sweden and New South Wales are not available.

North Sea Rescue Services

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list year by year since 1980 the dates and locations and numbers of injuries and fatalities of crew members of fast rescue craft engaged in rescues in the North sea oil fields.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is aware of two incidents: these were both associated with the Piper Alpha oil platform fire in July 1988. Six personnel on two of the rescue craft were injured, two fatally.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list year by year since 1980 the number of successful rescues carried out by fast rescue craft in the North sea oil fields, indicating from where the craft were launched and the dates and location of where the rescues took place.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not collect this data. However, information presented to the public inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster showed that 126 incidents occurred of men falling overboard from an oil installation between 1974 and 1986, and the most common means of recovery was by fast rescue craft deployed from standby vessels.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the existing procedures and logging requirements for the repair and maintenance of fast rescue craft used in the North sea oil fields.

Mr. McLoughlin: The recording of the repair or the maintenance of fast rescue craft is a matter for the owner or operator of the standby vessel, but surveyors from the Department will examine the condition of the craft during surveys and general inspections.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make changes in respect of fast rescue craft used in the North sea oil fields (a) to power the craft with diesel instead of petrol and (b) to have guarded propellers on such craft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: When fast rescue craft were first developed all that was generally available for propulsion were outboard petrol engines. New developments have made the use of diesel engines more practicable for the larger craft and their use is increasing. The phasing out of petrol engines and the use of guarded propellers will need to be considered in the revision of the present code of practice, but because of the range of duties a fast rescue craft is called upon to perform it is essential that design parameters should be as flexible as possible.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate what training procedures exist for crews of fast rescue craft in the North sea oil field; and who is responsible for monitoring such training.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the code of practice published by the Department, crews of fast rescue craft should attend a course in the operation of fast rescue boats which is offered by a number of training institutions. These courses are checked and endorsed by the Department. During annual inspections of standby vessels marine surveyors verify that sufficient numbers of crew members who have attended these courses are on board; and they often seek a demonstration of how the boats are handled.

Road Accidents

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents occurred, and how many people were killed or injured in those accidents, on (a) the M1 between junctions 1 and 17, (b) the M6 between junctions 1 and 4, (c) the A34 between Oxford and Stratford and (d) the A423 between Oxford and Coventry over the period 20 December 1990 to 3 January 1991.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as the information is available.

Underground Structures

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which Government Departments and associations of statutory or local authorities know the precise position of the principal underground services and utilities and, in particular, the position of sewers, water conduits, cables, pipes and wires belonging to the public utilities and how they relate to one another.

Mr. Chope: The requirements on persons with underground services to maintain records of their position vary according to the statutory powers or licence under which it was placed. The Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 and utilities' enabling legislation require undertakers executing works to consult other undertakers whose apparatus is likely to be affected and the street authority before starting major works. There is a need to improve the consistency and availability of records of underground services and the New Roads and Street Works Bill currently before Parliament contains provision for this.

Deeside Industrial Park

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the start date of the construction of a new entrance to the Deeside industrial park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Late 1994, subject to satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on apportioning the British total allowable catch for 1991 to the individual ports; and how he negotiates a Scottish allocation.

Mr. Curry: As agreed with the industry, the United Kingdom 1991 white fish quota will continue to be distributed among the United Kingdom fleet in proportion to the track record of individual fishing vessels. Most pelagic quota is also distributed in the same way, although currently some vessels have a fixed share of certain pelagic fisheries and the non-sector, because of its small size, has received an allocation rather greater than its track record would warrant. Departments will shortly be consulting the industry over the methodology to be applied in distributing pelagic quotas in future. The industry will also be consulted as necessary on the distribution of Hague preference fish obtained by the United Kingdom at the December Council.

Water Protection

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the code of good agricultural practice on water protection as foreshadowed in the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance".

Mr. Gummer: Last autumn's environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" stated that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food would be preparing a revised free advisory package of codes of good agricultural practice for farmers. I am pleased to announce that the first of these codes, which relates to the protection of water, has now been prepared in draft form for consultation in England and Wales. It contains practical and detailed guidance to farmers on how to avoid water pollution from farm wastes, fertilisers, nitrate, fuel oil, sheep dip, carcase disposal and pesticides. This draft code has been placed in the Libraries of the House, and is also available from the Vote Office.

Livestock Protection

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to improve the protection of livestock in markets.

Mr. Maclean: Orders have been made under the Animal Health Act 1981, to come into force on 1 March 1991, which will lay down detailed welfare safeguards for farm livestock and horses in markets. This important legislation will create a new offence of causing injury or unnecessary suffering to animals in markets. Horses at markets and other places of sale will now be protected by specific controls for the first time. The new orders will introduce minimum ages at which calves and foals can be put through markets without their mothers. There will be a ban on selling calves more than twice in any 28-day period, and practices such as the use of electric goads on calves, young pigs, sheep and horses and the tying of poultry and calves will be prohibited. Among other new provisions are controls on handling, penning, feeding and watering animals.

This legislation has been discussed with market operators and other interested parties, and follows closely recommendations from the Farm Animal Welfare Council, to which I am very grateful. We are also issuing codes of practice which give further guidance to all those involved in markets on how best to safeguard the welfare of animals.

In recent years, concern for animal welfare has become increasingly important in the design and running of today's markets. Everyone should realise that transport to and from market and the time spent there, can be potentially stressful for animals. The overriding principle behind the new orders and codes of practice is the need for particular care and consideration for all animals in these different environments.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Pay

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about the discretionary pay scheme for grades 2 and 3 staff in the home civil service.

Mr. Renton: In the fourth and last round of awards under the arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend the then Prime Minister on 23 April 1987, awards have been made to 21 grade 2s and 53 grade 3s. The total number of staff currently granted awards following four rounds of the scheme is 41 grade 2s and 157 grade 3s, respectively 29 per cent. and 32 per cent. of each grade. This is within the ceiling of 35 per cent. of each grade recommended by the Top Salaries Review Body.

The full-year cost of these awards is approximately £565,000 or about 1·9 per cent. of the annual pay bill for the grades concerned. The scheme is due to be replaced by new arrangements in April 1991.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give sterling's range of variation against (a) the franc, (b) the deutschmark, (c) the lira and (d) within the 6 per cent. bands for each month since Britain joined the exchange rate mechanism and for (a), (b) and (c) for the three months before joining.

Mr. Maples: Sterling's variation against the franc, deutschmark and lira before and after its entry to the ERM, and the greatest percentage dievations from sterling's central rates against all the other ERM currencies since entry are as follows:

		July	August	September	[1]October	November	December	[2]January

[1] From 8 October 1990.
[2] To 13 January 1991.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the inflow and outflow to and from and the net gain or loss to the reserves from the date of joining the exchange rate mechanism to the latest available date and for the equivalent period before joining.

Mr. Maples: Net changes to the reserves in the three months before and after sterling's entry to the ERM are as follows:

$ million

	Total change	Level of reserves at end of month
July	−172	38,842
August	+455	39,297

November	−102	38,470
December	−6	38,464

[1] Sterling entered the ERM on 8 October 1990.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the top and bottom of the pound's bands within the exchange rate mechanism and the highest and lowest points within them reached by sterling in each month since membership.

Mr. Maples: Sterling's upper and lower limits against the other ERM currencies, and the highest and lowest points at close of business since sterling's entry to the mechanism, are as follows:

Currency	Upper limit	Lower limit	October[1] High	October[1] Low	November High	November Low	December High	December Low	January[2] High	January[2] Low

[3] The exchange rate between the Belgian franc and the Luxembourg franc is fixed, with no margin of fluctuation.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for VAT returns for the Gordon constituency, or the Gordon district and Aberdeen district, for the last five years for which data are complete.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figures for VAT returns are not available in the form requested except at disproportionate cost. It has been possible to provide details for the last two financial years for traders currently registered at the Aberdeen local VAT office which covers the north-east of Scotland from Montrose to Nairn and the Shetland islands. The figures are as follows:

Year ending	Payments by Traders £ million	Repayments to Traders £ million	Net Payments to Traders £ million
31 March 1989	129·3	165·2	35·9
31 March 1990	167·1	204·5	37·4

Government Telecommunications Service

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the Government telecommunications service project negotiation.

Mr. Maples: My right hon. Friend the then Economic Secretary to the Treasury announced in a written answer on 15 February 1990, at column 340, that negotiations would be opened with Racal Data Networks Ltd. (RDNL) to determine whether the company could satisfactorily supply an integrated voice and data telecommunications service for use by Government Departments, to be known as the Government Telecommunications Service—GTS.

The Government and the company have now reluctantly concluded that it would not be possible to achieve agreement on the terms for the provision of such a service. The two parties have therefore agreed that the GTS negotiations should be discontinued. The decision was announced on 7 January 1991. The Departments concerned in the GTS negotiation will now be considering with the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency how best to meet future telecommunications requirements. This decision does not affect the existing service contracts held by RDNL which the company is continuing to implement—the Government data network—GDN—which serves 18 Departments and includes the NHS family health service network, and the voice network which RDNL is developing for the Department of Social Security.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans to submit draft treaty texts to the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend submitted a document, "Economic and monetary union—beyond Stage 1: Possible Treaty Provisions and Statute for a European Monetary Fund", to the Luxembourg presidency on 8 January. This sets out legal texts designed to amend the treaty of Rome so as to allow for the establishment of a European monetary fund managing a hard ecu in line with the proposals first put forward by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister when Chancellor. Copies have been placed in the Vote Office and the House of Commons Library.

Government Staff

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government departments at 1 October 1990.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 October 1990 there were 556,250 staff in post in central Government. Of those, 491,032 were non-industrials and 65,218 were classified as being in industrial work.

HEALTH

Deaf School Leavers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that deaf school leavers are provided with communication support when being assessed under section 5 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(2) what consideration is being given to the implementation of section 3(b) of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to ensure that deaf people have access to sign language interpreters and other communication support when being assessed for services by local authorities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to monitor the implementation of section 5 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, particularly in regard to deaf school leavers.

Mr. Dorrell: The social services inspectorate has carried out an exercise to monitor the implementation of those sections of the Act that are in force. The results of this inspection, and of the findings of a more specific study of the implementation of sections 5 and 6, were published last year in its reports "Developing Services for Disabled People" and "Developing Services for Young People with Disabilities", copies of which are in the Library. We expect authorities to provide communication support for all clients who require it as a matter of normal good practice, and our guidance on the implementation of community care has emphasised the importance of such services. Similar guidance is to be issued to assist authorities in the implementation of the provisions of the Children Act.

Sign Language Interpreters

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being undertaken by his Department to address the shortage of registered sign language interpreters for deaf patients.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department provides grant aid to the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People, which arranges courses in communication with deaf people and maintains a register of interpreters. The Department has also, for a number of years, grant-aided the British Sign Language Training Authority. The availability of sign language interpreters to deaf people seeking health care is a matter for local health service management, who are best placed to determine and provide for the local need for such a service.

Medical Research

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take to help non-teaching hospitals that provide major service support for research by external funders.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am pleased to announce a £2 million scheme to help meet the service support costs of research in non-teaching hospitals. The scheme will give financial help to hospitals that provide service support for major levels of research activity by external funders including local and national charities and the Medical Research Council. Applications for support under the scheme will be invited for autumn 1991 and the first allocations made for April 1992. An NHS management executive letter will be issued to health authorities shortly and will give further details.

Myelograms

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what equipment currently available under the NHS is capable of determining whether or not myodil dye was used in the past; what is the location of each scanner; and what is its current availability for use.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 January 1991]: If myodil dye was used in the past for a myelogram its clearance from the body will vary from patient to patient. Normal radiographic X-ray equipment should detect any myodil still present in a patient's body.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the chairman of National Power and PowerGen concerning a staggered sale of the share capital; what estimates he has made of the difference in net proceeds from a 100 per cent. sale and a staggered sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has decided to offer for sale 60 per cent. of the share capital of National Power and PowerGen next month, subject to market conditions. The chairmen of the companies have been informed of this decision, which reflects the Government's confidence in the long-term future of the companies and the wish to maximise proceeds in time.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what resources are allocated for a campaign to encourage home insulation as part of the energy efficiency project.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Energy Efficiency Office promotes energy efficiency measures in the domestic sector through a range of initiatives including the new home energy efficiency scheme, which came into operation on 1 January, provision of targeted information to householders, and the best practice programme. Of the total budget expected to be available to the EEO of nearly £42 million in 1991-92, some £30 million is in support of these programmes.

Electricity Cables

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will institute a feasibility study in co-operation with the electricity industry with a view to improving the overhead cable system and making it less vulnerable, particularly in rural areas, to severe snow and storm conditions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A joint Department-electricity supply industry panel of inquiry chaired by the Department's chief engineering inspector was set up in January 1982 to investigate the adequacy, and so on, of overhead electricity lines following the very severe snow storms in December 1981 and January 1982 which seriously affected Wales and the west of England. As a result a programme of improvements was put in hand costing over £100 million, which included the strengthening of the more vulnerable overhead lines and closer control of tree growth. The snowstorm which affected the midlands area in December 1990 was exceptional, but the East Midlands Electricity company—the worst affected—is carrying out a review of the event and the Department's engineering inspectorate is monitoring this review.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the 12 chairs of the electricity consumer committees to discuss next year's forecast price increases for domestic consumers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The functioning of the electricity consumers' committees is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Electricity Consumers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has regarding the numbers of electricity consumers with average consumption slightly less than 1 MW, who have stepped up consumption just sufficiently to gain access to non-franchise purchasing terms.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The criteria for franchise customers are set out in condition 2 of the second tier supply licences issued to suppliers. This makes it clear that the relevant demand calculations must be on the basis of the average of the three highest months of maximum demand in a 12-month period under normal operating conditions. It is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to oversee the implementation of licence conditions and to determine any disputes over whether the criteria have been met.

Power Cables

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will call for a report on the problem of ice accretion on power cables and the threat it poses to security of supply.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The phenomenon of ice accumulation on overhead electric lines and other structures is well understood technically. Weather conditions and their effect on overhead electricity transmission and distribution systems, including ice accumulation and electricity supply industry design standards, were exhaustively addressed in the joint Department of Energy-industry review into the widespread storm damage in the west of Britain during the winter of 1981-82. The phenomenon is not confined to the United Kingdom and occurs in other countries, including other parts of Europe, with similar climatic conditions to our own.

The area of East Midlands Electricity was particularly badly affected last December. The company is carrying out a review of those events and the Department's engineering inspectors will be keeping closely in touch with it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Levitt Group

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who is responsible for making an announcement, and at what time he expects it to be made, concerning the safety and security of money placed by investors with the Levitt Group.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that the provisional liquidators reported to creditors on Monday 14 January.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the current position of the Levitt group and the safety of investors' moneys.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 14 January 1991]: I understand that the provisional liquidators reported to creditors on Monday 14 January.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times company auditors have notified his Department of corporate fraud and irregularities.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not available in the form requested. To try to provide comprehensive information over a reasonable time period would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the individuals criticised in the inspectors' report on Bryanston can still carry out company audits.

Mr. Redwood: In respect of accountants, yes, except for Mr. Keith Cunningham whose membership of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has lapsed. The accountancy firm involved was required to pay costs of £273,000 and reprimanded under the joint disciplinary scheme.

Tottenham Hotspur plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries he has made into the suspension of shares of Tottenham Hotspur plc.

Mr. Redwood: The suspension of shares is a matter for the International Stock Exchange.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken or is proposing to take against Tottenham Hotspur plc for late filing of its annual accounts.

Mr. Redwood: Tottenham Hotspur plc has failed to submit accounts for the period ended 31 May 1990. The registrar has confirmed that the company has been notified of the default and appropriate action is being taken to secure compliance.

Suspension of Shares

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to propose legislation under which within six weeks of the share quotation being suspended the existing board of directors will be required to offer itself for re-election.

Mr. Redwood: No. If the shareholders of such a company wish to dismiss some or all of the directors they may requisition the convening of an extraordinary general meeting for that purpose under the provisions of section 368 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will bring forward proposals for legislation to require a company whose share quotation is suspended to call an extraordinary meeting.

Mr. Redwood: No. Section 368 of the Companies Act 1985 already gives a company's shareholders the power to requisition an extraordinary general meeting if they consider one necessary.

Accounting Procedures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he has any proposals for companies to write off purchased good will against profits rather than reserves;

(2) if he will propose legislation under which property companies would be prevented from capitalising the interest on their borrowings;

(3) what proposals he has for defining mergers and eliminating the anomalies arising from merger accounts.

Mr. Redwood: Issues of this sort are better dealt with through accounting standards than in the law. The matters raised are encompassed within exposure drafts issued by the Accounting Standards Committee and the responses received will be considered by the Accounting Standards Board in due course.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for requiring every public company to establish an audit committee and to specify in the annual reports any changes in accounting practice and its implications for the future.

Mr. Redwood: The Government endorse the use of audit committees, but have no plans to impose them on companies through legislation. Companies must be free to decide for themselves whether such committees are appropriate to their circumstances.

The existing requirements of SSAP2 in respect of the disclosure by companies of the accounting policies they have adopted and of SSAP6 in respect of the disclosure of the effect of prior period adjustments arising when an accounting policy is changed already cover the question of accounting policies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with the professional accountancy bodies about the establishment of a review panel to examine the accounts of listed companies and to establish an urgent issues task force to clear up areas of anomaly and clarify accounting guidelines.

Mr. Redwood: My Department consulted the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies fully about the implementation of the Dearing report, which recommended the creation of a review panel and an urgent issues task force.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has to ask the Audit Commission to lay down guidelines for the accountancy profession on the auditing of company accounts.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that the Export Credits Guarantee Department should continue to be based in the Crown offices at Cathays, Cardiff; and if he will list any obstacles that would need to be overcome for such a policy to be implemented in the long term.

Mr. Sainsbury: After the proposed privatisation of its insurance services group, ECGD's remaining operations will continue to be based in London and in various locations in Cardiff. It is ECGD's intention that, in respect of these remaining operations, it should retain a significant presence in Cardiff for the foreseeable future. I am not aware of any obstacles likely to prevent this. As regards the location of the insurance services group following privatisation, this would be a matter for the new management and owners.

Company Accounts

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to authorise a person under section 245c of the Companies Act 1985 for the purpose of making applications to court under section 245b in respect of accounts which it is alleged did not comply with the Act.

Mr. Redwood: Last week I made an order authorising the Financial Reporting Review Panel Ltd, a subsidiary of the Financial Reporting Council Ltd, for this purpose. The authorisation takes effect from 1 February. The relevant provisions of the Act apply to accounts for financial years starting on or after 23 December 1989. The review panel will be able to apply to the court for a declaration that a company's accounts did not comply with the Act and for an order requiring the directors to prepare revised accounts.

Research Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Research Council on 21 December 1990.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Minister for Industry represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Council of Ministers (Research) in Brussels on 21 December.

The Council agreed common positions on three specific programmes under the third framework programme for R and D 1990-94: "Environment, Telematics, and Marine Sciences and Technologies". It approved in principle the specific programme of life sciences and technologies for developing countries while asking the Committee of Permanent Representatives—COREPER—to consider further the technical annex of the programme. COREPER was also asked to examine the following programmes with a view to the possible adoption of common positions early in 1991: information technologies, communication technologies, industrial and materials technologies, and biomedicine and health.

RENAVAL Programme (Plymouth)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures his Department is taking as a result of the European Commission's approval of the RENAVAL programme for the Plymouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. Leigh: The RENAVAL programme enables the Department to introduce regional enterprise grants into the Plymouth travel-to-work area and this we shall do with immediate effect.

The programme is designed to support our regional policies of increasing competitiveness, encouraging innovation and business development and improving the skills of individuals.

Regional enterprise grants, up to £1 million in total, will be available to small firms employing fewer than 25 people for investment in new equipment and towards the costs of developing or improving products or processes.

I am sure that RENAVAL and the help now available under regional enterprise grants will be of enormous benefit to small businesses in the Plymouth area. It is a useful addition to the support already available under regional selective assistance and the enterprise initiative.

The grants will be administered from our Plymouth office. Regional selective assistance continues to be available to larger firms and consultancy support continues unchanged.

Life Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has of the practice of life companies using policyholders' funds to acquire shares in a company to benefit the company and not the policyholders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 14 January 1991]: Life companies have freedom to invest policyholders' funds for the benefit of the policyholders subject to the prudential regulation of my Department. Policyholders' funds must be applied with the intention of benefiting policyholders although not all investment decisions will turn out to be successful with the benefit of hindsight. The application of policyholders' funds with the intention of benefiting policyholders is a requirement of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and failure to comply constitutes a criminal offence.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Czechoslovak Academic Links Project

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications have been received by the British Council for funding under the Czechoslovak academic links project; and how many applications have been approved to date.

Mrs. Chalker: To date, the British Council has received 65 applications for links with Czechoslovakia under the Czechoslovak academic links project which is funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office under the know-how fund. Of these 15, have been approved.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding has been made available by the Government's know-how funds for the links projects with (a) Czechoslovakia, (b) Poland and (c) Hungary in 1990-91; and how much has been allocated in respect of projects for each country to date.

Mrs. Chalker: The sums made available in 1990-91 under the know-how fund for the academic links projects in Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary are £150,000, £150,000 and £100,000 respectively. To date £150,000 has been allocated under the Czechoslovak scheme, £143,000 under the Polish scheme and £94,514 under the Hungarian scheme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Middle East

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice Her Majesty's Government are giving to British citizens in the middle east.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As a precautionary measure against the risk of war and the possibility of civil disturbance and terrorist attack in some countries, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has given the following advice to travellers and residents. The dangers to British nationals are being kept under constant review, and advice may change at any time.

Iraq, Kuwait, Lebanon
Do not attempt to travel to these countries.

Bahrain, Qatar, Riyadh, Eastern Province of Saudi Arabia
Visitors: those with business in Bahrain, Qatar and the Eastern Province of Saudi Arabia and the cities of Riyadh and Tabuk should not be deterred from making necessary visits. They should register their arrival with the nearest British diplomatic mission and should tell the mission how long they expect to stay. Tourists and others whose visits are a matter of choice should defer their visits.
British Community: dependants are advised to leave these areas before the deadline of 15 January which has been set by the Security Council for the withdrawal of Iraq from Kuwait.

Elsewhere in Saudi Arabia; United Arab Emirates
Visitors: those with business to conduct should not be deterred from making necessary visits. Others whose visits are a matter of choice should defer their visits.
British Community: United Arab Emirates: dependants currently on leave or planning on taking leave should consider delaying their return until the situation becomes clearer.
Elsewhere in Saudi Arabia: no reason for dependants to leave provided this is not contrary to employers' policy.

Jordan, Yemen
Visitors: travellers are advised to defer visits to these countries if they can.
British Community: all British nationals whose continued presence is not essential should leave until the situation becomes clearer.

Israel and the Occupied Territories
Visitors: Travellers are advised to defer visits if they can.
British Community: British nationals should consider leaving if they have no essential reason for staying.

Algeria
Visitors: Travellers should defer their visit if they are able to do so.
British Community: British dependents are advised to leave Algeria until the situation becomes clearer; those who remain should keep a low profile and take sensible precautions against the risk of civil disturbance.

Morocco, Tunisia
Visitors: Travellers to Morocco and Tunisia should be aware of the risk of disturbances, particularly in cities.
British Community: Should keep a low profile and take sensible precautions against the possibility of civil disturbances.

Syria
Visitors: Travellers should keep in close touch with events and keep their plans under review. They should notify the British embassy in Damascus of their arrival.
British Community: Residents should maintain a low profile and avoid disturbances and public demonstrations.

Iran
Visitors: In the light of developments in the middle east and the proximity of Iran to the area of possible conflict, visitors should keep their plans under review and stay in close touch with events. They should tell the British embassy in Tehran of their arrival. Travellers should consider postponing visits to south western parts of Iran.

British Community: British nationals resident in the area close to the Iraqi border and the Gulf should consider moving themselves, or their dependants, to safer parts of Iran.

Turkey

Visitors: There is no reason not to travel to Turkey. Travellers should be aware that the situation in the south-east of the country might be affected if there were to be hostilities in the Gulf. Visitors planning to travel to the area are advised to inform the British embassy in Ankara. Travellers should also be aware that there have been recent terrorist incidents in the provinces of Diyarbakir, Elazig, Mardin, Hakkari, Siirt and Simok.

British Community: British nationals resident in south-east Turkey are being advised to keep in close touch with the British embassy. Those who are particularly worried about the situation should consider moving away for the time being.

Karachi

Visitors: travellers should not be deterred from making necessary visits but should register their arrival with the deputy high commission.

British Community: no change to the advice, which is to keep a low profile and take sensible precautions against the possibility of civil disorder.

Bangladesh

Visitors: given the uncertainty surrounding the situation in the Gulf intending travellers should consider postponing their journey unless they have substantive business to undertake. Any visitors to Bangladesh should keep in close touch with the British high commission.

British Community: British citizens should continue to take special care particularly during the period 15 and 16 January. Those working for organisations with known British or American connections should also consider what additional precautions they should take both for themselves and their companies.

Kaduna

Visitors: travellers should not be deterred from making necessary visits but should inform the deputy high commission of their arrival. Overland travellers through Kano should maintain a low profile for the time being.

British Community: are advised to keep a low profile and take sensible precautions against the possibility of civil unrest.

Sudan

Visitors: In the light of recent developments in Sudan travellers should visit the country only if their journey is essential.

British Community: All British nationals resident in the Khartoum area whose continuing presence is not essential are advised to leave.

Egypt, Greece, Oman, Libya, Cyprus

Visitors: no reason for travellers to change their plans in the light of recent developments.

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Fisheries Council will possibly meet on 17 January and may discuss 1991 total allowable catches and quotas, agreement between the EC and Norway, agreement between the EC and Sweden, agreement between the EC and the Faroes, agreement between the EC and NAFO, agreement between the EC and French Guyana, total allowable catches and quotas for Spanish and Portuguese waters, the 10th amendment to technical conservation measures, autonomous tariff quotas and tariff suspensions and the amendment to the structures regulation.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 21 and 22 January and will discuss the review of the sugar regime and the beef balance sheet. Other items which may be discussed are organic agricultural production, GATT beef quotas, GATT agriculture, GATT accompanying measures, presentation of 1991 agricultural prices proposals, fish hygiene and bivalve molluscs.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 28 January to conduct a multilateral surveillance of the economies of member states. It is likely that other items for discussion will include the abolition of fiscal frontiers and assistance to central and eastern Europe.

Gibraltar

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Gibraltar has received from the European Community's structural funds.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Gibraltar is to receive £237,223 from the United Kingdom's 1990 European social fund allocation to finance training and just under £2 million —2·8 million ecu—from the European regional development fund to assist in the conversion of a warehouse into small business premises. These are the first awards that Gibraltar has received from the structural funds.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Blindness

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department has any plans to recompense for the additional costs of blindness those claimants who are registered blind aged over 80 years and whose income support currently makes no provision in relation to their additional problems.

Miss Widdecombe: People who are registered blind and aged 60 years or more automatically qualify for the higher pensioner premium, which provides an extra £17·05 a week for single people and £24·25 a week for couples on top of their personal allowances. In addition, blind people can qualify for the severe disability premium, worth £28·20 a week, if they receive attendance allowance, nobody else lives with them and no one gets invalid care allowance in respect of their care. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Food Vouchers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if food vouchers are used as a suitable method of paying crisis loans in circumstances other than where the need has arisen because of the claimant's loss of money due to recklessness.

Mr. Scott: The power to make a payment out of the social fund under section 32(2)(b) of the Social Security Act 1986 may be exercised by making a payment to a third party with a view to the third party providing, or arranging for the provision of, goods or services to the applicant. The method of payment is a matter for consideration in the circumstances of each individual case. Information relating to the ways in which local offices make payments for crisis loans in individual cases is not available.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of crisis loans have been awarded as food vouchers for each month since April 1988 (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) in each of his Department's local office areas.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Deaf People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the new telephone line that will be set up to help disabled people claim benefits will include a minicom for deaf people.

Mr. Scott: The benefit inquiry line, which has been operating in Berkshire for a trial period of six months, includes the minicom facility for deaf people. Such a facility would be part of any extension to the system.

Community Charge (Strathclyde)

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in respect of the 1989-90 community charge rebate scheme for Strathclyde regional council (a) how many applications have been received, (b) how many applications have been approved, (c) to how many applicants payment of rebate has been made and (d) how much in total has been paid out in rebates.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. However, in December 1989 Strathclyde regional council estimated that its expenditure on community charge rebates in 1989-90 would be around £100 million and, in November 1989, 520,000 claimants were in receipt of a community charge rebate. Claims from couples are counted as one.

Source: 1. Housing and Community Charge Benefit Management Information System November 1989 quarterly stock count of claims.
2. Estimate of Community Charge Rebate expenditure prepared by Strathclyde Regional Council.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what age a child in normal physical and mental health will be regarded as not requiring guidance and supervision for the purposes of entitlement to the lower mobility component of disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 20 December 1990]: We have no plans to specify the age at which children normally cease to require guidance or supervision. The aim is to compare the requirements of a disabled child under age 16 with those of a child of the same age in normal physical and mental health. These reduce as children grow older and the Bill currently before Parliament recognises that, eventually, a point is reached when a child in normal physical and mental health will no longer require any guidance or supervision.

WALES

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors influenced his decision on the timing of the announcement in respect of the criteria to be applied to applications from organisations seeking to develop local services in Wales for those involved in alcohol misuse.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The criteria set for bids for funding projects to combat alcohol misuse were primarily influenced by the experience gained in operating a similar central funding initiative in respect of drug misuse.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the reasons for the delays from the initial announcements of plans for a campaign to tackle alcohol misuse and from the announcement of the amount of cash available for his Department to make details available and to invite applications from organisations concerned with the provision of local services in Wales in respect of alcohol misuse.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Following the announcement that central resources were being made available to combat alcohol misuse, it was necessary to establish a framework within which expenditure would be utilised and to seek the views of local agencies as to how the resources might best be deployed.

Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any account will be taken of projected land sales in determining his Department's annual level of contribution to each health authority in Wales (a) in 1990-91, (b) in 1991-92 and (c) in subsequent years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: At present, district health authorities in Wales benefit from the proceeds of surplus land and buildings, unless the facilities become surplus as a consequence of a centrally funded development. In these cases, the receipts are used to offset the cost of the development. No account is taken of the expected level of receipts in determining each health authority's share of capital funds, and authorities which are able to realise land sales have therefore benefited directly by the amounts raised enabling them to develop and improve health services. These arrangements, including the treatment of the receipts from surplus mental handicap and mental illness hospitals which should contribute to the development of alternative patterns of care, are described in the land transactions handbook.

Under the new arrangements proposed for capital funding for introduction in 1992-93, after a transitional period all proceeds from sales will be retained centrally and used to contribute to the cost of new developments. This is intended to ensure that the benefits from such sales should be used wherever they provide the best return in terms of health gain or improved efficiency. These arrangements are described in the consultation paper "The Health Service in Wales Implementing the White Paper: Capital Allocations" and copies are in the Library of the House. Because of the volume of capital developments that is currently in the pipeline or otherwise committed, and the time taken to complete new developments, the proposed arrangements would be phased in over a number of years. These transitional arrangements and details of the way in which it is decided that the new system should work will be announced in due course. However, for 1991-92, the current arrangements will continue to apply.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of their land sales will be retained by health authorities in Wales (a) in 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) in 1992-93 and future financial years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: District health authorities are currently entitled to retain and use the proceeds from the sale of land and buildings no longer needed by the health service except in those cases where the property has become surplus as a result of a closure following the provision of a centrally funded scheme. In such cases proceeds are returned to the all-Wales provision. Most receipts are retained by health authorities. The proportion of proceeds retained by health authorities in any year will depend on the particular sales which are completed during that year about which it is not possible to speculate.

These arrangements will continue in 1991-92. For 1992-93 and subsequent years, new arrangements for capital funding are in prospect. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him today on that subject.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each district health authority and special health authority in Wales for each of the last five years, 1985-86 to 1990-91, (a) the costs his Department considered in advance that the authority should achieve in efficiency savings, (b) the actual savings achieved and (c) the percentage of the previous year's (i) budget and (ii) actual expenditure represented by (a) and (b) in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Financial targets in respect of efficiency savings to be achieved through cost improvement in the NHS in Wales were first introduced in 1989-90. Monitoring of health authorities' cost improvement programmes began in 1988. Estimates of the new recurrent savings achieved by district health authorities and the Welsh health common services authority in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 are set out in the following table together with reported savings in 1988-89 and 1989-90 and the savings expected to be achieved in 1990-91. The cost improvement targets set for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are also shown. The equivalent information for the health promotion authority for Wales is not available.

[1]Estimated new recurring savings reported by health authorities.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing how much has been spent (a) by the Welsh Office itself and (b) by each health authority in Wales on training for the people recently appointed by him to the new health authority boards.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 14 January 1991.

Bronllys Hospital

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will investigate Powys health authority's inability recently to find money for a replacement washing machine for ward D at Bronllys hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Powys health authority advises that no request has been made for a washing machine to be located on Defynnog ward.

Llangoed Hall

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will order an investigation into Powys health authority's expenditure on a weekend at Llangoed Hall near Brecon.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No; this is a matter for Powys health authority.

Laura Ashley Factory, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the future of the Laura Ashley factory at Leeswood, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: The WDA is continuing its efforts to work with Laura Ashley to find purchasers. Detailed discussions are currently taking place with at least one interested company. My Department is being kept closely informed.

School Curriculum

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the national curriculum for pupils from the age of 14 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We intend to make a statement shortly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the teaching of (a) arts and music, (b) technology, (c) history and (d) geography from the age of 14 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We intend to make a statement shortly.

Industrial Development, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his plans to assist the development of the Warren Hall, Broughton, Clwyd site for modern industry.

Mr. David Hunt: I am advised that the Welsh Development Agency is exploring the possibility of a partnership development with the owners to bring the land forward for business use.

Castle Cement Factory, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the Castle Cement factory, Clwyd, to meet the work force.

Mr. David Hunt: As the hon. Gentleman knows, I met a delegation from Castle Cement on 18 December.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he will take concerning the proposed loss of jobs at the Castle Cement factory, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: It is very much regretted that the company consider it necessary to take such steps. The Welsh Development Agency will take these proposed job losses into account in planning its future activities and will review its plans in the light of continuing developments.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate the initiatives taken to advance the construction of the relief road of Shotton and Connah's Quay and the proposed new road bridge over the River Dee.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The timing of the scheme is a matter for Clwyd county council as the responsible highway authority. Preparation costs have been accepted for transport grant support in 1991-92.

Owens-Corming, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes consequent upon the loss of jobs at Owens-Corming at Llay, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: These job losses are very much regretted. The Welsh Development Agency will take these job losses into account in planning its future activities and will review its plans in the light of continuing developments.

Water Charges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sanctions are available to him if the guidelines and criteria produced by the Director General of Water Services on methods of charging for water are disregarded.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 14 January]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him on 14 January by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

SCOTLAND

Noble Organisation

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has considered the terms of the judgment of dismissal given by the Court of Session on 7 December of the appeal by Glasgow district council in the matter of the provision of an entertainments licence to the Noble Organisation at premises in Duke street, Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The terms of the Court of Session's judgment in this case have been noted. The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 is to be the subject of a consultative review next year and interested parties will have the opportunity to submit representations on the operation of its provisions.

Business Rates

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of non-payment of business rates for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is not available centrally.

Rural Communities

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of resources will be provided for the rural communities of Scotland in the 1991-92 financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The components of expenditure programmes which are relevant to rural areas are not separately identified.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all established gipsy sites in Scotland, indicating when they were established at each site.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The travelling people's sites run by local authorities in Scotland are listed in the table. In addition to them, it is estimated that around 240 pitches are regularly used by travelling people on privately run sites.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many planning applications refused by local authorities regarding opencast mining have been upheld by the Scottish Office; and if he will give this information in percentage terms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities assumed responsibilities for approving proposals for opencast coal mining on 11 December 1987. Since then my right hon. Friend has determined seven appeals against refusal of permission and has upheld three (43 per cent.)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the Law Mining Company concerning its planning application for opencast coal reserves at Townhead, near Rigside, within Clydesdale constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The company's planning appeal concerning its application to extract coal and fireclay by opencast operations at Townhead near Rigside is due to be heard at a public inquiry in Rigside village hall, commencing on 29 January. As this appeal is to be determined by the chief reporter, under delegated powers, the hon. Gentleman will appreciate that it would not be appropriate for me to comment on the merits or otherwise of the proposals, but he may be assured that before reaching a decision the reporter will give all aspects of the matter the most careful consideration.

New St. Andrew's House

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to removing the Scottish Office from New St. Andrew's house to alternative accommodation in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: In the light of the work needed to remove asbestos from New St. Andrew's house and refurbish the building consideration is being given to a number of options for the longer-term accommodation strategy of the Scottish Office. No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of the renovation work required to upgrade the Scottish Office premises at New St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh recommended by the Property Services Agency report.

Mr. Lang: As part of the reinstatement of the building after removal of asbestos Property Holdings would propose to refurbish the building to a high standard. The report by PSA Building Management, which was commissioned by Property Holdings, sets out a number of options for additional enhancement of the building, the total cost of which if they were implemented would amount to some £5 million, excluding fees and VAT.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is proposed to evacuate all staff employed at New St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh while the asbestos is removed.

Mr. Lang: The work programme for the removal of asbestos is still under consideration.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of removing all asbestos from the Scottish Office at New St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh.

Mr. Lang: The report commissioned by Property Holdings estimates the cost of removing the asbestos and reinstating the building to an appropriate standard as between £6·3 million and £8·6 million, excluding fees and VAT, depending on the work programme adopted.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of the improvement to the ventilation system at the Scottish Office at New St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh.

Mr. Lang: A number of possible alternative ways in which the heating, ventilation and air conditioning in New St. Andrew's house might be improved are under consideration; accurate cost figures cannot be given at this stage.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on non-domestic rates for 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: As a result of our policy of reducing Scottish business rate poundages to the level of the English national non-domestic rate, Scottish businesses will pay £58 million less in rates next year than they otherwise would have done. This is a reduction of almost 5 per cent. The total reduction due to this policy and our earlier decision to limit increases in poundages to no more than inflation from 1989-90 onwards is £230 million. That saving has been of great value to Scottish business and therefore to investment and employment levels.

The reduction of £58 million is larger than had been allowed for in drawing up the spending plans we made last year and £48 million of it will be met by increased revenue support grant to local authorities. Local authorities are being asked to contribute the remaining £10 million through efficiency savings.

The table shows the rate poundage which I intend to prescribe for each local authority in regulations that I shall lay before Parliament this week.

I am aware that Scottish business would like us to make faster progress towards full harmonisation, but we have to balance the costs of funding this policy with the pressures on the taxpayer and with the level of community charges. The decision to reduce business rates and to increase revenue support grant next year beyond our original plans at a time when resources are scarce does, I believe, demonstrate the high priority that we give to it. We remain committed to eliminating the difference between Scotland and England over the same timetable as the national non-domestic rate is phased in south of the border.

As last year, the reduction in poundages will be accompanied by an associated reduction in derating: from 35 to 32 per cent. Also as last year, this will apply across the board to all authorities in Scotland. However, a number of representations have been made to my Department suggesting, for example, that reductions in rates should be made differently in future, in order to give earlier benefits to higher-rated areas, or that a single level of derating for manufacturing and freight industry is particularly generous in those areas which have relatively low rates. I shall be reviewing these matters and our progress towards harmonisation, including the powers available to me, during the coming year to see whether a different approach might be adopted in future. In this context I will welcome the views of interested bodies.

Landfill Gas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what support is being given to local authorities, other than urging them to act on the recommendations on waste management paper No. 27 "The Control of Landfill Gas" on sites other than those which are commercially viable.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 January 1991]: It is for local authorities to make my right hon. Friend aware of their need to incur expenditure on the control of landfill gas, through their financial plans. Where authorities have identified gas control schemes in their plans, priority has been given to these schemes when consent allocations have been determined.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the landfill sites at which energy recovery is (a) now under way and (b) being considered for the future.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 January 1991]: We are not aware of any sites in Scotland where energy recovery is practised. Information on current and planned operations may be obtained from the district and islands councils which are responsible for regulating waste disposal activities, but they may not be aware of future plans of private operators whose proposals may be commercially confidential.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Satellite Television

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what would be the cost of installing satellite Sky television in a special viewing room in the House; and if he will make arrangements to do so after the Christmas recess;

(2) what consideration has been given to making it possible to watch satellite television in the television rooms.

Mr. MacGregor: The fourth report of the Services Committee of last Session (HC 614) states that, while access by Members to satellite and terrestrial television should be accepted in principle, no action should be taken to implement the introduction of that facility until the feasibility and cost of installing a broad-band telecommunications network for the Palace is known. The report calls for urgent communications to identify the type and capacity of cable required for the transmission of all forms of electronic data.

Text Telephones

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consideration has been given to the installation of minicoms, or text telephones, in the House to enable deaf people to contact their Members of Parliament and Members of Parliament to contact their deaf constituents.

Mr. MacGregor: Text telephones for the assistance of deaf persons are not in use within the House of Commons at present. I am arranging for the matter to be looked into.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Achievements

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the achievements of Her Majesty's Government since 1987.

The Prime Minister: Since 1987 the Government have continued to build upon the changes begun in 1979, to strengthen the economy, foster a spirit of enterprise and improve living standards.

Sterling has been brought into the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system, reinforcing the Government's strict anti-inflationary policy. Output is 8 per cent. higher. Investment has grown faster than at any time since the second world war. Taxes have been reformed. Privatisation of 29 more major businesses has taken place and 24 per cent. of the adult population now own shares. The Government have exercised strict control of public expenditure—general Government expenditure has been brought below 40 per cent. of GDP for the first time since 1966-67. Almost £30 billion of public debt will have been repaid by the end of the current financial year. Over 2 million more people are in work than in 1987.

In the public services we have improved efficiency, safeguarded quality and enhanced safety. Key themes, reflected in the reform of the health service, in housing policy and in education have been to increase choice and to encourage people to take personal responsibility for their well-being and that of their families.

The Government have striven to improve the quality of life of all the British people. A number of special initiatives have focused on those living in inner cities. The Government have played a leading role in developing environmental protection, nationally and internationally.

The Government have maintained a firm commitment to national defence and the NATO alliance. We have supported and contributed to NATO's efforts to establish closer relations with the Soviet Union and with the countries of eastern Europe. The United Kingdom has played an important role in securing firm reaction of the United Nations in dealing with Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. We have played a positive role in the building of the single market in the European Community.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Holland with Boston (Sir R. Body) Official Report, 18 December, column 165, what further investigation of the common agricultural policy he expects the EC to make; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The common agricultural policy is likely to be subject to a period of further reform as a result of renewed production and expenditure pressure and the outcome of the current GATT negotiations. The Commission's 1991-92 price proposals are likely to incorporate a first instalment of these reforms.

GATT

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his statement on 18 December, Official Report, column 157, whether the remit for the EC negotiations in the GATT talks has been altered by the recent Heads of Government meeting.

The Prime Minister: The meeting of European Heads of Government asked the Commission, which negotiates on behalf of the Community, to intensify its contacts with other participants in order to resolve outstanding problems.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 1108, on what basis he calculates the figure of a loss of three quarters of a million jobs through the establishment of a national minimum wage.

The Prime Minister: Officials in the Department of Employment have estimated that a national minimum wage set at half male median earnings will result in the loss of about three quarters of a million jobs. This estimate uses earnings information from the new earnings survey and information on the relationship between real wages and employment set out in the published Treasury paper "The Relationship Between Employment and Wages: Empirical Evidence for the United Kingdom" (HM Treasury, January 1985).

A detailed explanation of the method was placed in the House of Commons Library on 2 February 1990—"Estimating the Effect of a National Minimum Wage".

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his reply on 17 December, Official Report, c. 15, if he will list the Government conventions regarding the use of paid publicity and advertising within which expenditure on advertising in the press, television and other forms of publicity is a matter for departmental Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The conventions on Government publicity and advertising have already been published. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on 28 June 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) at column 311.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Staff (Salaries)

13. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the current salary levels of university staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend received a delegation from the Association of University Teachers on 11 December 1990. I myself received representatives of the union on 20 November. At these meetings a number of issues, including salary levels, were raised.

Youth Service Organisations

14. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from youth service organisations concerning proposals for a core curriculum of activities.

Mr. Atkins: We have received a number of representations on the core curriculum following the first and second ministerial conferences with the youth service. The Government will take account of the comments received in responding to the recommendations of the second ministerial conference. I shall send my hon. Friend a copy of that response in due course.

Educational Provision

15. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards eliminating surplus places and rationalising educational provisions.

Mr. Eggar: It is for local education authorities to bring forward proposals for rationalising their school provision. My right hon. and learned Friend and his predecessors have repeatedly urged LEAs to do more to remove wasteful surplus places.

Sport (Drugs)

16. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss means to discourage the use of drugs in sport.

Mr. Atkins: I already meet the chairman of the Sports Council at regular intervals to discuss issues of mutual concern, including the misuse of drugs in sport.

University Funding

17. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers on university funding.

20. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from the Association of University Teachers on university funding.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received copies of the association's recent publications, and met a deputation from the association on 11 December.

Vocational Education

18. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the Business and Technical Education Council to discuss vocational education.

Mr. Eggar: I met representatives of the council on 21 November to discuss vocational education. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to meet them in the spring.

Schools Budget

19. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what variation there is between local education authorities in the proportion of education budgets delegated to schools under local management of schools.

25. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the proportion of the schools budget which local education authorities are holding back for central control.

Mr. Fallon: The proportion of the potential schools budget delegated to schools varies from 89·10 per cent. in the LEA delegating the most, to 77·97 per cent. in the LEA delegating the least. This wide variation is unacceptable and we are determined that LEAs should delegate more. We have recently proposed that LEAs should delegate at least 85 per cent. of the potential schools budget by 1 April 1993.

Secondary School Libraries

21. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when was the last occasion on which Her Majesty's inspector of schools investigated the state of secondary school libraries.

Mr. Fallon: Her Majesty's inspectorate's most recent report on secondary school libraries was published in January 1990 and covered 58 secondary schools in six local education authorities.

Bradford City Technology College

22. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total amount, to the most recent practicable date, spent on grant aid by his Department on the city technology college in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Total grant aid to Bradford city technology college up to 31 December was £7·8 million. This total includes management, capital and running costs.

Teacher Recruitment

23. Mr. Tredinick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last discussed teacher recruitment in Leicestershire; what were his conclusions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Leicestershire local education authority requested grant support for £150,000 of expenditure on teacher recruitment in 1991-92; the authority was informed last month that this bid will be met in full, as part of the grant support announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 18 December, at columns 122-23. A similar amount will be available in 1992-93. This funding reflects the Department's commitment to assist authorities in the development of initiatives to improve teacher recruitment.

Sixth-form Colleges

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications he has received from sixth-form colleges seeking to obtain grant-maintained status.

Mr. Eggar: None so far.

Daily Worship

26. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of schools holding a daily act of collective worship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Education Reform Act all maintained schools are required to provide daily collective worship for all registered pupils, except those pupils withdrawn by their parents.

Sport

27. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards sport in schools.

Mr. Atkins: Physical education, which includes sport, will be a compulsory part of the curriculum in all maintained schools for the first time under the requirements of the national curriculum. All pupils of compulsory school age will be required to participate in a programme of physical education throughout all the key stages of the national curriculum.

As part of the Government's current review of their policies towards sport and active recreation, we are also looking at other ways in which children of school age can be encouraged to participate in sport both during and outside school hours, including through the further promotion of links between schools and local sports clubs.

Further Education

28. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he has given to the setting of targets for participation in full and part-time education and training for 16 to 19-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend's objective is to raise both the proportion of 16 to 19-year-olds taking part in full and part-time education and training, and their levels of attainment. The Government are making good progress in both respects as a result of the recent school reforms, the introduction of pilot training credit schemes, and the many growing links between education and industry. They expect to see further improvements in participation rates in the 1990s as a result of the introduction of the national curriculum.

English and Mathematics

29. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of 15 and 16-year-olds achieved an A, B or C pass in (a) GCSE English and (b) GCSE mathematics for the most recent year available.

Mr. Eggar: Of the pupils eligible to take GCSE examinations in year 11 in 1988-89, 45 per cent. gained grades A to C in GCSE English and 34 per cent. in mathematics.

Deaf Children

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans his Department has to research and monitor the literary attainment of deaf children in mainstream schools and special units.

Mr. Fallon: The Department has no plans to undertake any specific research in this area. However, unless statutory exceptions have been made, the literary attainments of deaf children in ordinary schools and special units will be assessed, as for all children, under the arrangements for the national curriculum.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance his Department has issued to inner London boroughs on the provision of special youth work provision for young deaf people to replace that previously provided by the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Atkins: No special guidance has been issued to individual inner London boroughs. Following the abolition of the Inner London education authority, the Department is providing interim support of £500,000 per annum for each of the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 to the Londonwide voluntary education organisations. Friends for the Young Deaf has benefited from this arrangement, as have organisations such as SENSE, PHAB and Gateway.

TEMPUS Scheme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the European Council of Ministers intends to extend the TEMPUS scheme to promote the development of the higher education systems in the countries of central and eastern Europe to countries in addition to Poland and Hungary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The European Community has already approved the extension of the TEMPUS programme to the former German Democratic Republic and Czechoslovakia in academic year 1990-91, and in principle to Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria in 1991-92. The Community would consider extensions to other central and eastern European countries if they requested it.

Teacher Assessment

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional funding is to be made available to meet the additional cost of teacher assessment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall support through education support grants £10 million of spending on school teacher appraisal in England in 1991-92 and at least £10 million in 1992-93. The figures for subsequent years will be set in due course.

TRANSPORT

Urban Clearway

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list any differences between the regulations applying to the existing clearways in the Greater London area and those being used in the current red route experiment.

Mr. Chope: Urban clearways are subject to a blanket prohibition on parking and loading at peak periods. Drivers can stop at any time to pick up and set down passengers. Clearway regulations are applied only to stretches of road where this uniform treatment is appropriate. The pilot red route traffic orders provide for differing treatment along the whole of the route to fit road conditions and local requirements. Where necessary, there is a total ban on stopping. Elsewhere, there is provision for parking, waiting and loading at certain times. Waiting and loading bays are marked in the road, with frequent signs indicating times of application.

Channel Tunnel

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to require the operators of the channel tunnel to segregate passengers and vehicles during transit.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for the design, construction and safe operation of the tunnel system rests with Eurotunnel. All of Eurotunnel's designs and operating procedures are subject to the approval of the Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission—IGC—which is advised on safety matters by the independent Channel Tunnel Safety Authority—SA. Both are binational bodies established by the treaty of Canterbury.

In December 1989 the IGC decided that Eurotunnel could continue to develop its transport system on the basis that coach and private car passengers would not be segregated from their vehicles during transit through the tunnel. With regard to safety aspects of their decision, the IGC took the advice of the SA that non-segregation would be acceptable subject to a number of binding requirements. Copies of the IGC's decision and the SA's note of March 1990 reviewing the principal factors on which their advice was based, were placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects to initiate the red route experiment in east London; over what lengths of road it will operate; and how many person hours per day or per week he estimates will be spent in its operation.

Mr. Chope: The red route pilot scheme in east London is entirely on local authority roads, from the Angel to Butcher row. A distance of some 3·5 miles is involved plus certain measures on adjacent roads. The local authorities concerned are expecting to install the scheme over the next few months beginning in February on the Aldgate and Commercial road stretch. The effort to be applied to enforcement maintenance, and fine tuning of the measures will depend on experience of their operation. Estimating the resource requirements is one of the objectives of the pilot scheme.

High-speed Rail Link

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now take active steps to ensure or to investigate the options that would provide a high-grade, high-speed rail link to the City and the west end, in addition to that already planned for Paddington.

Mr. Freeman: The east-west crossrail, which was given approval by the Department of Transport on 9 October 1990, will link the City and the west end to Paddington and the express link to Heathrow. BR and its partners are also considering whether crossrail might be used to provide through services from the City and the west end to Heathrow.

Cross-London Rail Tunnel

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now take steps to ensure that land in the areas of Stratford and Paddington which could be used for a cross-London railway tunnel is safeguarded for planning purposes by the relevant planning authorities as part of their responsibilities for strategic planning.

Mr. Freeman: Directions to safeguard the alignment of the proposed east-west crossrail were issued by authority of the Secretary of State on 5 November 1990.

Road Widening, Brixton

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to widen the main London-Brighton road at Brixton road near the junction with Atlantic road.

Mr. Chope: None. This is a local road for which the London borough of Lambeth is the highway authority.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy objective of central Government control of local authority capital borrowing.

Mr. Key: Local authority capital expenditure, which is mainly financed by borrowing, amounts to nearly one third of all public sector capital expenditure. Regulation of local authority borrowing is, therefore, an important factor in the Government's control of public expenditure.

Community Charge

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of extra staff taken on by local authorities in England and Wales for the collection and administration of the community charge; and if he will provide a breakdown by local authority.

Mr. Key: It is estimated that about 15,000 extra staff have been taken on by local authorities in England and Wales for the collection and administration of the community charge. No individual authority breakdown is available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his replies of 26 November 1990, Official Report, column 259 and 12 December 1990, Official Report, column 434, if he will publish the information for those local authorities for which information is missing from the material deposited in the Library.

Mr. Key: One local authority has sent in information to my Department and another has revised its figures since the previous answer I gave to the hon. Member.

	Authority
	Blaby	Mid Suffolk
Number of people who have made a payment in respect of a personal community charge by 30 September 1990	45,000	55,693
Number of people liable who have not made a payment in respect of a personal community charge by 30 September 1990	17,000	2,939
Proportion of charge payers making a payment (per cent.)	72·6	95·0

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the estimated 1991-92 average community charge would be reduced if (a) education and (b) education, fire and police were financed through central Government funding, with no change in the grants paid by central Government to the local authorities.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer, 15 January 1991]: On 31 October 1990 the Secretary of State issued a consultation paper on revenue support grant for 1991-92 and related matters. The Secretary of State's proposals included net revenue expenditure to provide a standard level of service of £17,135·7 million for education, £2,352·9 million for police and £1,020·6 million for fire and civil defence services. If all authorities spent at the level of their standard spending assessment, he proposed that their income from community charges should be £12,972 million.

If central Government were to fund education spending in line with these proposals, with no change in the amounts on non-domestic rates, and revenue support grant paid to local authorities, there would be no need for a community charge as the extra government funding would exceed the proposed community charge income.

Correspondence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich, dated 26 July 1990, regarding the National Association of Chimney Sweeps.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend's office wrote to the hon. Member on 14 August pointing out to her that her letter had been transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry as the subject was primarily a matter for that Department.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution is being made by Saudi Arabia and other states towards the maintenance of the British forces in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: An agreement was signed with Saudi Arabia yesterday, confirming the provision of free food, water, fuel, accommodation and transport for our forces. Other countries in the Gulf where our forces are stationed, our allies in the Western European Union, and other nations are providing a range of practical assistance and we are continuing to discuss what further support might be made available.

Royal Navy

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is in a position to announce any measures affecting Royal Navy establishments arising from his statement to the House on 25 July 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Detailed work on the future structure of the Royal Navy support area is continuing. At this stage in our considerations, however, it has already become clear that it will be possible to achieve significant savings through rationalisation of some functions. As a consequence of these measures, it is our intention to close, by 31 March 1992, the RN leadership school—HMS Royal Arthur—the RN Diesel repair depot, Blackbrock Farm, and, within the next 12 to 18 months, the accommodation and administrative headquarters at Furse house, London—HMS St. Vincent.

The leadership training functions presently carried out at HMS Royal Arthur will be transferred to an existing training centre at Whale island, Portsmouth—HMS Excellent. The resulting collocation of leadership training with management and divisional training will produce savings in terms of service and civilian manpower, as well as other running costs. The closure of HMS Vincent should produce worthwhile savings in similar areas, as well as receipts from the disposal of Furse house, assuming that no other defence use for the building is found. There will, however, be some costs in terms of lodging and subsistence allowances for those personnel currently accommodated in the establishment.

An independent review of the strategy for the repair and overhaul of RN marine diesel engines has concluded that there is no need to retain the in-house repair facility at Blackbrook Farm. Significant savings will be achieved through putting the whole repair task to industry, which already deals with some 70 per cent. of the work.

Consultations with the trade unions will take place, in accordance with normal department practice, and we hope to be able to offer alternative employment to the majority of the civilian staff affected by these closures.

Iraqi Trainees

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Iraqi military personnel underwent training in the United Kingdom in each of the years 1981 to 1990 inclusive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 14 January 1991]: Details of military assistance provided to individual countries are normally confidential between Governments. In addition, statistics are normally collected on the number of places allocated to foreign students not on the number of individuals trained, who may attend more than one course. A total 430 places on MOD training courses were allocated to Iraqi students between 1981 and the cessation of training, following Mr. Bazoft's execution, in March 1990.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General what is the expected time it takes for an appeal against refusal of (a) a visitor's visa and (b) an entry clearance to be heard; what were the comparable figures three, six and 12 months ago; and what plans he has to reduce this time.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department and the Immigration Appellate Authorities —IAA—do not keep detailed statistics on the expected times for appeals to be determined in the form requested, but it is possible to provide an informed estimate.

Over the past 12 months the average time taken for the IAA to deal with visit visa and settlement appeals to Adjudicators has been six to seven months. This does not include the time which appeals are in the hands of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Home Office and appellants' representatives. This can take from 2 months upwards depending on the nature and complexity of the case.

In addition, the average for appeals from a determination by an Adjudicator to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal over the same period has been 4-6 months, depending on the length of time taken by the parties to prepare their case.

The Lord Chancellor's Department is seeking to keep waiting times for hearings to a minimum and has authorised the IAA to increase the number of staff from 85 to 96½.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Attorney-General what are the most recent figures for the number of appeals received by the Social Security Commissioners concerning (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance.

The Attorney-General: The number of appeals received by the Social Security Commissioners in 1990, the last year for which figures are available, concerning (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance are 268 and 573 respectively.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Attorney-General what are the most recent figures for the number of decisions by social security commissioners regarding the award of either mobility or attendance allowance that found the decisions of (a) delegated medical practitioners and (b) medical appeal tribunals to be erroneous in law.

The Attorney-General: The number of decisions by Social Security Commissioners in 1990, the last year for which figures are available, regarding the award of Attendance Allowance that found the decisions of the Delegated Medical Practitioner to be erroneous in law is 535. Medical appeal tribunals become involved in attendance allowance appeals very infrequently. The number of decisions by Social Security Commissioners in the same period regarding the award of Mobility Allowance that found the decisions of medical appeals tribunals to be erroneous in law is 235.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account is taken in determining the 1991-92 voluntary-aided capital programme of the academic results of a school; and how many voluntary-aided schools have a better academic record than Hasmonean high school, Barnet.

Mr. Fallon: Information on academic performance of individual voluntary-aided schools is not held in the Department and is not taken into account in determining the voluntary aided and special agreement capital programme.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the 1991-92 voluntary-aided capital programme is being allocated to (a) Church of England schools, (b) Roman Catholic schools and (c) Jewish schools.

Mr. Fallon: The percentage of new major voluntary aided and special agreement building projects approved to start in 1991-92 has been allocated as follows:—(a) 41 per cent. for Church of England schools, (b) 41 per cent. for Roman Catholic schools and (c) 0 per cent. for Jewish schools. The remaining 18 per cent. was allocated for new projects in non-denominational voluntary aided and special agreement schools. Percentages are not available for expenditure on minor projects—£5,000 to £120,000 —since it is for local education authorities to determine how best to distribute their minor works allocations after consulting the associated bodies within their area.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Barnet council first included the rebuilding of the Hasmonean high school in its voluntary-aided capital programme submission.

Mr. Fallon: Barnet local education authority first included the rebuilding of the Hasmonean high school in its plans for 1984-85.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account is taken in determining the 1991-92 voluntary-aided capital programme of the extent to which schools are oversubscribed; and how many of the schools which received funding were more heavily oversubscribed than Hasmonean high school, Barnet.

Mr. Fallon: No account is taken of oversubscription in determining the 1991-92 voluntary-aided capital programme, except in the case of projects which result from statutory proposals to provide new school places in the absence of spare capacity in neighbouring schools. The information requested in the second part of the question is not available.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of Barnet schoolchildren are educated in voluntary-aided schools; what is the comparable percentage for other London education authorities; and what correlation there is between these percentages and the scale of new projects approved for the voluntary-aided sector 1991-92 capital programme.

Mr. Fallon: A total of 34 per cent. of Barnet school children were educated in voluntary aided schools as compared with 22 per cent. for Greater London. There is no significance in any correlation between these percentages and the scale of new projects approved for the voluntary-aided sector 1991-92 capital programme.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in how many of the submissions for the 1991-92 voluntary-aided capital programme the sponsors offered to provide more than 15 per cent. of the cost.

Mr. Fallon: None.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science with whom were discussions held during the passage of the Hasmonean High School Bill and what was the then estimated cost of the proposals contained in the Bill.

Mr. Fallon: Discussions were held with officials of the Department acting on instructions from Ministers. The total estimated cost of rebuilding the boys' school on the girls' school site and enlarging it to six forms of entry was £5·96 million at April 1990 prices.

Teacher and Pupil Numbers

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science further to his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North dated 17 December 1990, Official Report, column 26, if he will show the number and change in the number of (a) teachers employed by local education authorities, in full-time equivalents and in percentage terms in each year, and (b) pupils in similar terms since 1970.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested for local education authority maintained and grant-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England is given in the table.

[2] Teacher figures from 1971-76 (inclusive) exclude student teachers and instructors in the nursery sector. Figures for 1975 and 1976 exclude student teachers and instructors in the primary and secondary sector.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is (a) the number of teachers employed by local education authorities and (b) the number of local education authority pupils in each year since 1979; and if he will show the percentage increase or decrease in each case.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested for local education authority maintained and grant-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England is given in the table.

Air-conditioning Systems

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state, or provide references to, the conditions made in school building regulations concerning the circulation and regular replacement of air in school classrooms, workshops and laboratories and any study made of the relations between these requirements and the incidence of cross-infection.

Mr. Fallon: Regulation 25 of the 1981 Education (School Premises) Regulations refers to the main recommendations for thermal environment set out in the current edition of the Department's design note 17:

"Guidelines for Environmental Design and Fuel Conservation". The design note itself includes recommendations on ventilation of schools. We are not aware of any studies made of the relations between the requirements for schools and the incidence of cross-infection.

Teachers, Norfolk

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average number of (a) holidays and (b) sickness leave taken by teachers employed by Norfolk education committee in each of the years 1961, 1971, 1981 and 1989.

Mr. Fallon: The data requested are not held centrally.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out in greater detail the statistical basis of his statement in his speech to the north of England education conference on 4 January, that only one country in the European Community exceeds the United Kingdom's present figure of 33 per cent. of the relevant age group achieving higher education qualifications, including his definition of qualification for these purposes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The figures on which the statement are based are given in the table:

Higher education qualifications awarded

The qualifications included are all higher education qualifications—sub-degree, first degree and post-graduate—including nursing and paramedical qualifications and estimates of professional qualifications.

The calculation is based on OECD methodology for calculation of participation indices. The total number of qualifications awarded is divided by the average population of the age-group at which the qualifications are typically obtained. Further information is available in statistical bulletin 4/87, a copy of which is in the Library.

University Funding

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much he has made available for capital purposes for the universities in every year since 1979 expressed in 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Capital grants to universities in Great Britain paid since April 1989 by the Universities Funding Council and, before then, on the advice of the University Grants Committee were:

Financial year	Cash £ million	1990-91 prices[1] £ million
1979-80	87·8	190·1
1980-81	97·9	179·2

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of his powers under section 156 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, how many applications from fire and civil defence authorities regarding expenditure on civil emergency co-ordination he has received; how much expenditure each application was in respect of; how much expenditure was agreed to by his Department in each case; and whether his Department has any plans to issue guidance concerning the application of section 156 of the Act.

Mr. John Patten: Section 156 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 enables a fire and civil defence authority, with the consent of the Secretary of State, to incur expenditure within the existing resources of principal councils in co-ordinating planning by principal councils with respect to emergencies or disasters. With the exception of an initial approach from the London fire and civil defence authority for the expenditure of £8,000 which has not yet been decided, no applications have been received. We have no plans at present to issue guidance about the application of this section of the Act.

Asylum

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the procedures for receiving asylum seekers and refugees in the light of experience following recent changes to these procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no recent major changes in procedures and I am not clear to what changes the question refers. In view of the sharp increase in numbers of asylum applications in the United Kingdom, the Government are urgently reviewing arrangements for dealing with asylum seekers.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning procedures for dealing with refugees and asylum seekers; what was his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We receive representations from time to time on many aspects of our procedures for receiving asylum seekers. Representations are made by hon. Members, interested organisations and the public. Many of the issues raised are being considered in the Government's current review of asylum arrangements.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each month from September 1989 to the nearest available date the number of asylum applications, by country (a) at ports of entry, (b) after entry and (c) at British ports overseas made in each case for (i) principal applicants and (ii) their dependants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 December 1990]: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information records dependants by the date and location of the application of the principal asylum applicant and also does not generally include dependants who join a principal applicant after the principal application has been decided.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of dependants granted permission to join family members in the United Kingdom (a) who themselves had refugee status under the 1951 convention and (b) who had exceptional leave on the basis of family reunion, if he will give for 1989 and 1990 so far (i) the numbers of each nationality, (ii) how many cases and for which nationalities were required by the embassies abroad to pay visa charges and how much was paid in each case, (iii) for each nationality the numbers by reference to the familial relationship to the convention refugee in the United Kingdom and (iv) the delay between application and date of issue of visa in terms of three months, six months, nine months, and over one year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 December 1990]: Information is not available in the form requested. The available information on asylum applicants records dependants by reference to the data on the principal applicant, and does not record the location of the dependants, or the date, whey they applied. It also does not generally include dependants who join a principal applicant after the principal application has been decided. Information on visa applications by dependants to join a person recognised as a refugee or granted exceptional leave in the United Kingdom is not available centrally. I understand that overseas posts have standing instructions that visas for dependants joining a person who has been recognised as a refugee under arrangements made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees or its partner the intergovernmental committee for migration —now the International Organisation for Migration— should be issued free of charge.

European Citizenship

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the concept of European citizenship following the agreement of the European Council that the matter should be examined; and which body will be undertaking the examination.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 14 January 1991]: The concept of European citizenship, separate from national citizenship, needs considerable refinement and clarification before any decisions on its precise implications and acceptability could be made. Work on this is going ahead in the intergovernmental conference on political union.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether input tax will be recoverable by privatised electricity distribution companies on the costs arising from the sale of their own shares on a basis which differs from normal VAT practice; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Input tax incurred by a business in relation to the issues or sale of its own shares, an exempt supply, is not recoverable. However, shares in the electricity distribution companies were issued and sold on behalf of the Secretary of State for Energy, not the electricity distribution companies and the benefits of the sale accrued to the Government. Costs incurred by the electricity distribution companies in their privatisation were regarded as general overheads of their business—mainly the taxable supply of electricity—and any associated VAT was recoverable in accordance with the provisions of the VAT Act 1983.

Coinage

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his statement of 7 December 1990, Official Report, column 639, he will list the organisations which were consulted in respect of the shape and size of the new five pence coin, indicating those who approved of its introduction; what further consultations he has in hand, or has completed, concerning the proposal to phase out the 10p and 50p coins, respectively; when replies to such consultations must be made; and when he expects to make any relevant decisions.

Mr. Maples: In July 1987 the Royal Mint issued a consultative pamphlet, "The United Kingdom Coinage". This set out four options for making the coinage lighter together with the option of "no change". The consultation was announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the Trial of the Pyx on 1 May 1987 and in a Treasury press notice. It was widely reported in the press at the time. Comments were received from the general public and from a wide range of organisations representing:

1. The handicapped, the blind and the elderly.
2. Manufacturers and operators of coin-operated machinery.
3. Bulk handlers of cash such as banks, supermarkets and retail outlets.
4. Local Government, education and Chamber of Trade.

A substantial majority of those who commented favoured change and preferred the option in which the 5p was replaced by a coin similar to the old sixpence, and the 10p with one similar to the then existing 5p.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, having carefully considered all the responses to the consultation, announced on 17 December 1987 that he had decided to introduce the most popular option. The precise specifications of the new coins were decided later following consultations with the blind and with manufacturers of coin-operated machines. As a result of the discussions with representatives of the blind, it was agreed that the new coins should have a pronounced milled edge to make them more easily identified by touch.

Following discussions with the banks and the vending industry on timing, the new 5p coin was introduced into circulation on 27 June 1990. It has subsequently been decided, again after consulting the banks and the vending industry, that the new 10p coin will be introduced into circulation from September 1992 together with copper-plated 1p and 2p coins. The precise date has still to be announced but will be discussed with the banks and the vending industry. The old 5p coin was demonetised on 31 December 1990, but no decision has yet been taken on when to demonetise the existing 10p coin. The existing 1p and 2p coins will continue in circulation.

There are no plans at present for any further changes to the coinage.

Alcohol Duty

Mr. Wells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will set out in the Official Report the current rates of excise duty expressed in ecus in each of the EC member states for (a) table wine, (b) sherry at 16·5 per cent. alcohol, (c) port at 20 per cent. alcohol and (d) spirits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Rates of excise duties applied in each of the EC member states to table wines, fortified wine and spirits according to the latest information available, are set out in the table.

Country	Excise duty on table wine (ecu per 75cl bottle)	Excise duty on sherry at 16·5 per cent alcohol (ecu per 75cl bottle)	Excise duty on port at 20 per cent. alcohol (ecu per 75cl bottle	Excise duty on spirits (ecu per bottle)
Belgium	0·26	0·43	0·56	4·49
Denmark	1·19	2·21	2·21	13·87

Luxembourg	0·08	0·27	0·40	2·68
Netherlands	0·27	0·44	0·57	4·11
Portugal	0·00	0·00	0·00	0·57
Spain	0·00	0·08	0·08	1·26
United Kingdom	1·16	1·93	2·23	7·33

Notes:

[1] Rates of exchange as at 10 January 1991.

[3] From the information available we can identify only four member states which apply different rates of duty to fortified wines of 16·5 per cent. and 20 per cent. alcohol. For the other member states the rates quoted are illustrative for products of 18 per cent. alcohol.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the balance of payments deficit or surplus for (a) manufacturers, (b) semi-manufacturers, (c) services, (d) consumer goods, (e) raw materials, (f) machinery and (g) invisibles for 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Mellor: The information, where available, can be found in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", available in the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database, which may also be accessed through the Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments surplus or deficit for invisibles for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Information relating to the surplus or deficit for invisibles can be found in table 1.3 of the 1990 edition of the CSO's United Kingdom balance of payments publication—the Pink Book—and in table B of the CSO's quarterly balance of payments press notice. Copies of both are available in the Library of the House or alternatively the data can be found on the CSO database which can be accessed through the Library.

Public Sector Manpower

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his answer to the hon. Member for North Norfolk, dated 19 December 1990, Official Report, column 177, on public sector manning, if he will state the number of people employed in the public sector in 1978-79 and 1988-89 (a) excluding nationalised industries and (b) excluding nationalised industries and armed forces, and also give the change in manpower in per cent. terms.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

	1978-79 thousands	1988-89 thousands	Change thousands	Per cent.
(a)	4,722	4,580	−142	−3·0
(b)	4,396	4,256	−140	−3·2

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of payments surplus or deficit on manufactured goods for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information is available in Table A9 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and its annual supplement, available in the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database, which may also be accessed through the Library.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual growth rate in the gross domestic product of the United Kingdom in (a) the 1960s, (b) the 1970s and (c) the 1980s.

Mr. Maples: Between 1980 and 1989 the average annual growth in gross domestic product of the United Kingdom averaged 2·7 per cent. per annum. This compares with growth rates of 3·0 per cent. in the 1960s and 1·8 per cent. in the 1970s.

Purchasing Initiative

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made in implementing the Government's purchasing initiative since 1988-89.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A report by the central unit on purchasing on progress in government purchasing during 1989-90 is published today. It records that central Government Departments, excluding the Ministry of Defence, reported value-for-money improvements in their purchasing totalling over £515 million equivalent to 6·7 per cent. of total reported expenditure. Since the start of the Government purchasing initiative in 1985, total value-for-money improvements have exceeded £1·3 billion.

Also, in 1989-90, Departments reported value-for-money improvements of £205 million arising from new initiatives taken in that year. This equates to 2·8 per cent. of purchasing expenditure of some £7,311 million.

For 1990-91, Departments will report only on savings arising from new initiatives in that year and collectively have set targets for value-for-money improvements of £118 million or 3·1 per cent. of purchasing expenditure. This target gives sharper emphasis to the current performance of departmental purchasing organisations.

The report also records progress on other areas of the purchasing initiative and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Share Offers (Priority Rights)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals concerning the existing income tax exemption for directors and employees who derive a benefit from being given priority rights in a public offer of shares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The existing provisions concerning priority share allocations remove the possibility of a tax charge on directors and employees arising solely because, where a public offer is oversubscribed, they get more shares than members of the public who apply for the same number. The exemption is available only in the context of a genuine public offer, of which the priority allocation to directors and employees forms a small part—10 per cent. or less—and where other conditions are met.

Most public offers comprise shares in just one company, and in these cases this rule causes no difficulty. But where a public offer consists of a package of shares in two or more companies, and directors and employees are entitled to priority allocations of shares in just one or only some of them, the exemption is not available. This is because the package offer to the public and the single company share offer or offers to employees cannot be treated under the existing provisions as a single public offer.

Since the Government do not believe that it would be right to charge tax in such circumstances we propose to extend the present tax exemption to cover them. We propose that the extension to the relief should apply to any public offer of shares made on or after today. Legislation to effect this will be included in the Finance Bill 1991.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government Appointees

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all Government-appointed nominees to the board of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

[1] Nominated by the Northern Ireland Housing Council.
[2] Ongoing.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all Government-appointed nominees to the Police Authority for Northern Ireland since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: For security reasons it is not our policy to disclose the names of members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland.

Local Government Boundaries Commissioner

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is in a position to announce the name of the person who is to be the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I am pleased to announce that Dr. Maurice Hayes has been appointed as Local Government Boundaries Commissioner for Northern Ireland. He will commence his task on 1 February 1991.

Parliamentary Commissioner and Complaints Commissioner

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will make a statement about the offices of Northern Ireland Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints.

Mr. Brooke: Dr. Maurice Hayes, who has held the two offices since July 1987, will be retiring from them on 31 January 1991 and thereafter will be taking up appointment as the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner for Northern Ireland.

Her Majesty the Queen has appointed, to succeed him in the two offices, Mrs. Jill McIvor. Mrs. McIvor is already deputy chairman of the Radio Authority and will retain that office, but will forgo a part of the salary normally payable for the offices of Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Commissioner for Complaints equivalent to the salary she receives as deputy chairman.

EC Support

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been allocated by the EC for each of the operational programmes under the Community support framework for Northern Ireland 1989-93.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 January 1991]: The Community support framework for Northern Ireland was approved on 31 October 1989 and provides for nine operational programmes, all of which have now been agreed by the European Commission. Community funding is allocated to the operational programmes as follows:

	MECU	£ million
Physical and social environment	34·0	23·97
Transportation	137·0	96·58
Industrial development	116·46	82·10
Agricultural development	53·6	37·78
Tourism	44·223	31·17
Multipriority	25·194	17·76
Apprenticeship training	4·693	3·30
Combating long-term unemployment	32·64	23·01
Occupation and integration of young people	174·32	122·89

Figures are shown in 1989 prices and based on the December 1990 exchange rate of £1 = 0·705 ecu.

The resources allocated in the Community support framework also include provision for various programmes, for example, STAR, Valoren, non-quota border areas, non-quota textiles and so on, which were in operation before the Community support framework was agreed.

Disability

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requirements are laid on employers in Northern Ireland to ensure that a proportion of their work force is registered disabled.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 14 January 1991]: The Disabled Persons (Employment) Act (Northern Ireland) 1945 requires employers with 20 or more employees to employ a 3 per cent. quota of registered disabled people.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Less-favoured Area Status

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his written answer to the hon. Member for Taunton on 19 December, he will list in the Official Report the parishes in Somerset and Devon in respect of which he applied to the European Commission for an extension of less-favoured area status and which was not agreed to by the Commission.

Mr. Curry: The Parishes in Somerset and Devon which include some land which was covered by the application to the European Commission for an extension of the United Kingdom less-favoured area but which was not accepted by the European Commission were:

Somerset: Churchstanton, Otterford, Pitminster, Spaxton.
Devon: Bishops Bympton, Chulmleigh, Kings Nympton, Knowstone, Meshaw, Molland, Oakford, Okehampton Hamlets, Rackenford, including former Creacombe, Rose Ash, Thornbury, Twitchen, Witheridge.

HEALTH

Day Surgery Facilities

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to monitor the proportion of new day surgery facilities at King's College hospital used by (a) private and (b) national health service patients.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Camberwell health authority has given assurances that this unit is designated wholly for NHS patients.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he gives about the appointment of members of district health authorities; and whether he includes specific advice concerning the desirability of members residing in the area covered by the health authority to which they are appointed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for each regional health authority to decide on the appointment of members to district health authorities within its area. Guidance issued to health authorities in July 1990 specifies that it is preferable for members to live or work in, or have connections with, the community served.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the number of health authority members who live in the health authority area for each authority in the North Western health region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available centrally. Responsibility for appointing non-executive members of district health authorities rests with regional health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bruce Martin, the chairman of the North Western regional health authority, for details.

Census White Paper

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the independent confidentiality review mentioned in paragraph 29 of the census White Paper, Cm 430; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The report of the British Computer Society's independent review on the confidentiality arrangements for the computer processing of 1991 census data will be published, together with the Government's response, in a White Paper before the census, which is on 21 April this year.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether regional health authority cash limits for 1991-92 have been issued.

Mr. Waldegrave: Allocations and initial cash limits were issued just before Christmas. However, the 1990-91 baseline on which these were based had not been properly adjusted to take account of expenditure on long-stay patients, and this affected regions' positions from their weighted capitation target. The new figures for allocations, set out as follows, were notified to regions early in the new year and revised cash limits will follow. This revision does not affect the overall money available or the principle upon which it has been distributed between regions.

1991-92 Revenue allocations to RHAs (England)

Region	1991-92 Allocations for resident population £ million	Percentage cash increase for resident population
Northern	985·3	10·0
Yorkshire	1,121·0	10·5
Trent	1,406·5	10·5
East Anglian	595·7	11·8
North West Thames	1,097·2	10·0
North East Thames	1,295·5	10·0
South East Thames	1,221·2	10·0
South West Thames	946·8	10·0
Wessex	872·1	12·1
Oxford	675·4	10·0
South Western	1,000·0	11·8
West Midlands	1·566·8	10·0
Mersey	775·2	10·0
North Western	1,295·0	10·0

Regional cash limits will include additional amounts for specific purposes.

WALES

Pwllpeiran Husbandry Farm

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to safeguard the future of Pwllpeiran experimental husbandry farm in Cardiganshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Options to safeguard the research facilities available at Pwllpeiran are being explored at present.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount he estimates each district health authority and special health authority in Wales should be able to achieve in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in respect of (a) efficiency savings, (b) cuts in services and (c) income generation and list the factors he has taken into account in estimating a figure that reflects local circumstances in each district health authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The 1990-91 cash-releasing cost improvement and income generation targets set for district health authorities in Wales and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority are shown in the table. In 1991-92, these authorities collectively will be expected to realise £11 million from cost improvement and income generation. The targets to be achieved by individual health authorities will depend on their recurring revenue allocations. These are currently being determined and should be announced shortly.

Individual targets are the subject of bilateral discussions with health authorities. They are expected to be achieved by genuine efficiency savings and additional income generated, and not by making cuts in services. The Welsh Office has issued clear guidance to health authorities that cost improvement measures should not result in a reduction in the quantity or standard of service provided. Authorities' costs improvement programmes are closely monitored to ensure that they do have an adverse effect on the pattern or provision of services.

The Health Promotion Authority for Wales has a target figure of £67,000 in 1990-91 for the generation of additional net income. A target for 1991-92 has not yet been set. Targets for cost improvement are not set for the authority.

Cash-releasing cost improvement and income generation targets for district health authorities in Wales and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, 1990-91

Health authority	Cash improvement target (£000s)	Income generation target (£000s)
Clwyd	1,282	231
East Dyfed	824	149
Gwent	1,518	274
Gwynedd	761	137
Mid Glamorgan	1,776	321
Pembrokeshire	312	57
Powys	367	66

Powys Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the amount spent by Powys health authority on its board room; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Powys health authority advises that the cost of replacement furniture for the board room amounted to £4,755.

National Curriculum

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to meet (a) local education authorities of Wales, (b) the teachers' unions and (c) the parent-teacher associations of Wales to discuss the national curriculum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have already had extensive consultations with these bodies. We have no plans at present to meet them, but intend to make a statement shortly on the national curriculum in Wales for pupils aged 14 to 16.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he plans to call an all-Wales conference of those concerned with education to discuss the national curriculum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no such plans at present but intend to make a statement shortly on the curriculum for pupils aged 14 to 16.

Connah's Quay Power Station

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take special measures to assist Alyn and Deeside council to develop the site of Connah's Quay power station.

Mr. David Hunt: Development of the site at Connah's Quay is a commercial matter for its owners, PowerGen plc. However, I understand that PowerGen has no plans to sell the site at present and that Connah's Quay is one of a number of sites under consideration for future power generation purposes.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the availability of cancer treatment for patients in north Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Radiotherapy treatment is provided to patients in north Wales at specialist centres in neighbouring English regions and central funds have provided fast comfortable ambulance transport for Gwynedd patients having to travel for treatment. Central funds have also been made available to provide medical oncology services at Ysbyty Gwynedd, Ysbyty Glan Clwyd and Ysbyty Maelor Wrexham to reduce the need for patients to travel for treatment. A report on cancer treatment services in north Wales commissioned from Deloitte, Haskins and Sells is being considered following wide consultation. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Family Farms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time family farms there are in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of holdings in Wales estimated to have the economic potential to provide the equivalent of a full-time occupation was 16,613 in June 1989.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time family farmers left the industry in Wales in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: The total number of whole-time principal farmers or partners in June 1988 was 19,460 and 19,392 in June 1989. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to assist full-time family farmers in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Welsh farmers receive assistance as appropriate from a range of measures including the sheep annual premium, beef special premium, suckler cow premium and hill livestock compensatory allowances. Expenditure on grants and subsidies to Welsh farmers total over £100 million a year. In addition, the beef market has also been supported by the special arrangements for intervention which has thus far cost about £230 million on a United Kingdom basis and Welsh sheep producers have also benefited from the bringing forward of the two advance payments of sheep annual premium worth £25 million.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist full-time family farming in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I recognise the importance of family farms within the structure of agriculture in Wales and their significance in social terms. I will continue to seek to ensure that these farms, along with others, are able to compete effectively and on equal terms within the single European market.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in which locations in the world the Welsh Development Agency has direct, on-the-spot representation by (a) an employee and (b) an agent; and how these arrangements have changed in the past 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Development Agency and its inward investment division, Welsh Development International, have permanent representation at a number of locations overseas. In north America the main office is in Baltimore with part-time representatives in California and Ottawa. In the far east the main office is in Tokyo with another representative in South Korea. In Europe, in addition to the headquarters in Cardiff, there is an office in Stuttgart, a representative in London and consultants are employed in Brussels. Of the above offices employees of the Welsh Development Agency are located in north America, Stuttgart and London. Within Wales the agency has six regional offices staffed by its own employees.

The Welsh Development Agency has had overseas offices since 1983 and the arrangements are kept under continuous review. Changes during the period have included: the opening of the Stuttgart office in 1990 in succession to the employment of agents; the closure of a representative office in Stockholm in 1988; the appointment of consultants in Hong Kong in 1989, an arrangement which ended in 1990; and the rearrangement of north American representation in 1989.

Health Service (Land Sales)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the future ownership of land and buildings belonging to the hospital service in Wales and the principles for buying and selling surplus property and the application of the proceeds;

(2) what policy considerations have led him to review the arrangements for overseeing the buying and selling of surplus land and buildings forming part of the national health service estate in Wales;

(3) whether he has any proposals to set up a new non-departmental government body to oversee the buying and selling of surplus land and buildings owned by the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 15 January 1990]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the letter sent to him on 16 January 1991 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. A copy of it is being placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Higher Education

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to present to the House draft regulations to implement the European Community directive of 21 December 1988 on a general system for the recognition of higher education diplomas awarded on completion of professional education and training of at least three years' duration (89/48/EEC).

Mr. Sainsbury: I expect to lay regulations implementing directive 89/48/EEC shortly.

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has held with the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales over its application for a supervisory body status.

Mr. Redwood: There have been a number of discussions between the Department and the institute on this matter, and I expect further discussions to be held.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

15. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's and European Community policy over the maintenance of indefinite sanctions against Iraq until Iraq abandons its chemical, binary and nuclear programmes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The sanctions imposed on Iraq by Security Council resolution 661 will remain in place until the Security Council is ready to lift them. A judgment on whether Iraq continues to harbour aggressive designs on its neighbours in the region will no doubt be one of the factors in the Council's decision.

24. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of the effectiveness of sanctions against Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions were imposed on Iraq to help bring about Iraqi compliance with the United Nations Security Council resolutions. The test of their effectiveness is whether they achieve that purpose. There is no evidence that sanctions alone will do so.

Brazil

17. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when it is anticipated the next meeting will take place between the Brazilian Government and Her Majesty's Government on environmental issues.

Mrs. Chalker: Frequent meetings and discussions are taking place at official level. The next meeting at ministerial level is expected to be in late April.

Lebanon (British Hostages)

18. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect renewed diplomatic relations with Syria will have on prospects for the release of British hostages held in the Lebanon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Syria is an important regional power with a strong influence in Lebanon. On the resumption of diplomatic relations the Syrians undertook to continue their strenuous efforts to obtain the release of western, including British, hostages in Lebanon. This must contribute towards the prospects for a release. Our own efforts will of course remain unremitting.

Intergovernmental Conference

19. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress within the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Hurd: The two intergovernmental conferences began in Rome on 15 December last year. The initial sessions dealt mainly with procedural matters. We have British proposals to make in both negotiations.

European Legislation

20. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the implementation of EC legislation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Commission's lastest report on single market implementation shows that the United Kingdom has implemented 84 per cent. of measures requiring national implementation. Only Denmark 88 per cent. and Portugal, with its derogations—85 per cent.—had a better record.

Argentina

21. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Argentina.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There has been good progress since the resumption of diplomatic relations with Argentina last February. Trade is growing rapidly. Several ministerial meetings have led to agreements on visa abolition; fisheries conservation; cultural co-operation; and investment promotion and protection. We aim to build on this encouraging trend.

Cyprus

22. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions, as a guarantor power, he has had with the Greek Cypriot Government about recent developments in southern Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We maintain regular high-level contacts with all parties involved in the intercommunal dispute, and actively support the United Nations Secretary-General's efforts to promote a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement.

38. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will convene a conference of the guarantor powers to discuss the resolution of the Cyprus dispute.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We believe that the United Nations Secretary-General's mission of good offices offers the best hope of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the intercommunal dispute in Cyprus. As part of our active support of United Nations efforts, we maintain continuous diplomatic contact with all parties to the dispute, including the fellow guarantor powers.

Romania (Adoption)

23. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is currently being provided by the British embassy in Bucharest to couples wishing to adopt Romanian orphans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Entry clearance applications on behalf of Romanian children whom British couples wish to adopt are made at the British embassy in Bucharest and forwarded to the Home Office in the United Kingdom. The embassy will continue to help British adopters to complete United Kingdom entry clearance procedures as quickly as possible.

"Get It Right Before You Go"

25. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the consular leaflet "Get It Right Before You Go".

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received appreciative comments on its general travel advice leaflets, "Get It Right Before You Go".

The original leaflet, "Consular Assistance Abroad", explains what a consul can and cannot do for Britons in trouble abroad and is distributed mainly through travel agents. The new leaflet "A Checklist for Travellers" is distributed with British visitor's passports through post offices and concentrates on a few key messages including encouraging travellers to take out adequate insurance and to safeguard valuables.

Middle East Conference

26. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any discussions with the United States Government about convening a middle east conference on the Palestinian question; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in close touch with the Americans about ways to advance the peace process. We welcome their agreement to a statement by the President of the Security Council on 20 December that an international conference, at an appropriate time, properly structured, should facilitate efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement and a lasting peace in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

27. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of his last meeting with the Prime Minister of Israel concerning the setting up of a middle east peace conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met Mr. Shamir in October. Their discussions confirmed continuing differences of approach on Arab-Israel, including over the merits of an international conference. We have long supported this idea. That support continues. But a conference is a technique, not an end in itself. It needs willing participants if it is to get anywhere. We take every opportunity to point out to the Israelis the need for flexibility if the peace process is to be advanced.

Zimbabwe

28. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Zimbabwe during 1990 about the abuse of human rights in Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Chalker: None. Zimbabwe's human rights performance has significantly improved in recent years.

The Gulf

29. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any fresh proposals for resolving the Gulf crisis; and if he will make a statement.

30. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on developments in the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in the Gulf.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on 2 August, we and many others have made sincere efforts to bring the Gulf crisis to a peaceful solution on the basis of the relevant Security Council resolutions. Those efforts have been redoubled in the last days, notably by Secretary Baker's meeting with Tariq Aziz on 9 January and by the United Nations Secretary-General's visit to Baghdad on 13 January. Iraq has utterly failed to respond positively to any of these initiatives. We continue to urge Iraq to choose the path of peace. But the 15 January deadline was a real one. If Iraq does not withdraw from Kuwait it will be forced to do so.

Mr. Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on President Menem's decision to send Argentine warships to join the multi-national forces in the Gulf.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We welcome and support President Menem's decision to make a contribution. Accordingly and exceptionally, we are allowing a limited supply of essential maintenance spares for an Argentine Meko class destroyer and frigate now deployed as part of the Argentine contribution to the Gulf. This is an exception to, but not a change of, policy on the supply of military-related equipment to Argentina.

The Commonwealth

31. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet the Secretary General of the Commonwealth Secretariat to discuss the Commonwealth.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to do so, but my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, expects to see the Secretary General on 22 January.

Syria

32. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Syria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom resumed diplomatic relations with Syria on 28 November. It is to our advantage to have normalised our relations with such an important regional power at this time of crisis in the middle east.

Latin America

33. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has proposed to help improve relations with Latin America.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We do all we can to strengthen our excellent relations with Latin America, promote trade and investment, protect the environment and combat drugs-trafficking. We and our EC partners have established dialogues with Rio group and Central American Ministers, and aim to increase our development aid to the region.

Soviet Union

34. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had concerning the provision of expertise and technical and other support to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We agreed with our European partners at the Rome European Council in December to offer technical assistance worth up to 400 million ecu—about £285 million—to the Soviet Union. This decision is being reviewed in the light of recent developments in the Baltic states. EC Foreign Ministers made it clear on 14 January that our co-operation with the Soviet Union could not be implemented if repression continued in the Baltic states.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans any urgent aid by way of pharmaceutical products and medicines for the Soviet Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom is participating in the EC programme of humanitarian assistance to the Soviet Union agreed at the European Council in December 1990. This aid will include food and medical supplies to the value of 3 million ecu. A total of 250 tonnes of medical supplies have already been despatched by the European Community.

The United Kingdom has not received any specific requests for medical aid from the USSR.

Foreign Affairs Council

35. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the European Community Foreign Affairs Council is next due to meet; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The next meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council will be on 4 and 5 February. Discussion is likely to include GATT, EC relations with EFTA, Turkey and with the United States, ACP debt and Japanese car imports.

British Exports

36. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how high a priority Foreign Office posts overseas are placing on the promotion of British exports; and how such efforts are measured.

Mr. Garel-Jones: In 1990, a total of 29 per cent. of overseas staff resources were devoted to commercial work. This makes it the FCO's major activity overseas. The effectiveness of our commercial sections is measured in a number of ways, including an independent quality management system.

Somalia

37. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of the situation in Somalia and the position of Somali refugees in Ethiopia; and whether he will press for further international efforts to achieve peace.

Mrs. Chalker: There has been a serious outbreak of fighting in Mogadishu between Government and rebel forces and the situation remains confused. British embassy staff and the British community were evacuated on 6 January for their own safety. Somali refugees in Ethiopia are in the care of UNHCR and in no immediate danger. We are continuing to work with other countries on efforts to bring reconciliation and peace to Somalia.

Guatemala

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Guatemala about human rights abuse in general and, specifically, about the massacre of civilians in Santiago, Atitlan Solola province on 2 December; if he will raise this matter with the Guatemalan authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Her Majesty's ambassador has reported fully, including the shootings at Santiago Atitlan. He and his EC colleagues raised them with the Guatemalan Government on 4 December. On 14 January, the Twelve made a statement congratulating President Serrano on his election, and expressing their hope that human rights would be fully respected.

Varosha

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with Mr. Rauf Denktash on the future of Varosha.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has had no discussions with Mr. Denktash. Varosha will be a key element in any settlement of the intercommunal dispute in Cyprus. All parties to the dispute are well aware of our strong view that there should be no change in the status of Varosha, nor any settlement of the area in contravention of UN Security Council resolution 550 of 11 May 1984.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EC Legislation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Lord President of the Council what percentage of legislation enacted in the past year originated in the EC Commission.

Mr. MacGregor: For national legislation, records are not kept centrally of which new provisions give effect to Community obligations and the relevant information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. European Community legislation, some of which is directly applicable in the United Kingdom, is published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, L series.

Aluminium Cans

Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will consider the possibility of arranging for the siting of recycling bins for aluminium cans within the House of Commons.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand that the authorities of both Houses are considering the practicability of siting bins for the collection of cans for recycling.

Canned Drinks

Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the volume of canned drinks sold in the House of Commons in the latest available year.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of canned drinks sold in the House for the latest 12-month period, to December 1990, was 90,980.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of outstanding industrial tribunal cases at the end of November.

Mr. Forth: I regret that the information requested is not available for the end of November. However, on 3

January, excluding cases which require further interlocutory action before listing for hearing, there were 13,483 registered applications awaiting hearing. Of these, 4,716 have been listed for hearing. However, some two-thirds of all registered applications do not come to a hearing because they are withdrawn or settled prior to a hearing.

European Social Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his target date for the payment of European social fund grant to voluntary organisations for the 1991 programme.

Mr. Forth: It is my Department's intention that applications will be approved and initial payments made in the first half of 1991. This timetable is of course subject to the views of the partners in the European social fund who are currently considering how much time they need to deal with their part of the process.

At a meeting on 8 January the Commission and the Government proposed a target date of 15 April but the partners indicated that early May might be preferable to them. Even this date depends on the Commission releasing moneys for 1991 to Britain in good time.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what detailed steps he is taking to improve staffing and procedures for dealing with 1991 applications for European social fund applications.

Mr. Forth: A number of improvements are being made by my Department. We have increased our staffing substantially. The application forms have been simplified. Speedier checks on claims for payment will be introduced. As requested by the European social fund partners, early indications have been given of the overall sums of money likely to be available to the various groups of applicants. The assistance of the European Commission has been sought, particularly in speeding up the approval in Brussels of United Kingdom claims for payment.

At a meeting on 8 January the Commission and the Government proposed a target date of 15 April, but the partners indicated that early May might be preferable to them. Even this date depends on the Commission releasing moneys for 1991 to Britain in good time.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to issue the application form for voluntary organisations for the 1991 European social fund programme.

Mr. Forth: The application forms for 1991 are expected to be dispatched on Friday 18 January to the representatives of the main organisations involved in the European Social Fund.

At a meeting on 8 January the Commission and the Government proposed a target date of 15 April, but the partners indicated that early May might be preferable to them. Even this date depends on the Commission releasing moneys for 1991 to Britain in good time.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the percentage regional chages in employment and self-employment for 1970 to 1979 and 1980 to 1989 for each of the standard regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Offices

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the level of funding of community care loans and grants at his Department's office in Great Ancoats, Manchester; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have received representations from the director of public health for Manchester health authority about the level of the social fund budget at the Department's Manchester Central local office. This is currently under consideration.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what change there has been in the numbers and time involved in waiting for a claim to be dealt with following the introduction of the computer system at Chorlton.

Miss Widdecombe: Before introduction of the computer system to Chorlton, five days were ascribed for dealing with income support claims. This target is unchanged.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what efforts he makes to ensure consistency between the granting of loans and grants by his Department's different offices.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State issues directions and guidance to social fund officers; however, we believe that flexibility and the exercise of discretion are important features of the social fund.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the level of funding of his Department's Great Ancoats office in the light of changing demand.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department monitors workloads on a monthly basis and conducts an annual review of resource allocations. Allocations to offices each year take account of forecast workloads, and the in year monitoring examines the distribution of staff resources at local level.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the frequency and nature of errors on the computer system used to calculate benefit at his Department's Chorlton, Manchester office.

Miss Widdecombe: There have been a number of system faults reported since the computer system was installed on 29 May 1989 at DSS Chorlton. They have been corrected as they arose.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many items of post are outstanding presently at Chorlton.

Miss Widdecombe: At 14 December 1990, the latest available date, the number of unlinked items of post was 47.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to alter the structure and staffing levels at his Department's Chorlton office.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1991, the Chorlton, Rusholme and Wythenshawe offices will come together to form the South Manchester district service and will be managed as a single unit, but no offices will be closed to the public. District managers will be responsible for drawing up detailed plans to provide the best possible service to local customers in the most effective way. These will be prepared in consultation with interested parties, including constituency MPs.

Allowances (Appeals)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current success rates for (a) initial claims, (b) initial reviews, (c) later reviews, (d) appeals to the social security commissioners and (e) appeals to social security appeal tribunals for attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available but such information as is available is as follows:

(a) In 1988 there were 362,000 initial claims for attendance allowance. In the same period, there were 208,000 awards.

(b) and (c) I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 3 December 1990 at columns 6-8.

(d) In 1989, 457 appeals were lodged with social security appeal tribunals. In that period, 67 appeals were decided in the claimant's favour.

(e) The Lord Chancellor's Department has advised that information is not available from the office of the social security commissioners on the success rate of attendance allowance appeals.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the success rates for (a) initial claims, (b) appeals to medical boards, (c) appeals to medical appeal tribunals and (d) appeals to the social security commissioners for mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table:

Numbers received in 1990

	Number	Number of successful determinations in 1990[1]
Initial claims	201,500	97,500
Appeals to medical boards	27,500	8,000
Appeals to medical appeal tribunals	8,500	3,000
Appeals to the social security commissioners	[2]n.a.	[2]n.a.

n.a. Not available.

[1] Determinations are not necessarily made in the same period.

[2] The Lord Chancellor's Department, who are responsible for the office of the social security commissioners (OSSC), have advised that information is not available on the success rate of mobility allowance appeals.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those potentially eligible for the disability working allowance have partners in paid employment.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that a small number of people, probably less than 5,000, of those eligible for disability working allowance have partners in paid employment.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the (a) threshold levels, (b) taper percentage and (c) maximum benefit levels for the proposed disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: Illustrative rates for disability working allowance—DWA—are contained in the note on DWA published on 12 November, a copy of which was placed in the Library. The level at which the benefit will be introduced in April 1992 will be settled nearer the time, subject to the passage of the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Bill.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances the disability working allowance may be awarded for a period either more than or less than 26 weeks; whether any circumstances relating to the claimant's own personal circumstances entitle a claimant to have the amount of his award reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Normally awards of disability working allowance will be made for 26 weeks, but if large numbers of claims are received in advance of the start of the scheme it might, for operational reasons, be necessary to stagger awards to even out renewal claims. Awards will be reviewed, and terminated, only in prescribed circumstances: that is, if a single claimant or both members of a couple die or if a child of the claimant's family leaves and joins another family and income support, family credit or another award of disability working allowance becomes payable in respect of him or her.

Family Credit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of current family credit recipients by (a) employees, (b) self-employed, (c) mortgage owners and (d) tenants, further broken down by sex.

Mr. Jack: At the end of May 1990, the latest date for which figures are available, the information is as follows:

	Number
(a) Employees
Male	139,000
Female	129,000
Total	268,000
(b) Self-employed
Male	38,000
Female	9,000
Total	47,000

No information is available about the number of family credit claimants who are mortgage payers or tenants.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations have been received by his Department concerning the problems faced by the self-employed who wish to claim family credits; and what action has been taken by his Department to deal with the problems.

Mr. Jack: Most of the representations have related to business income for family credit purposes being determined on a different basis from that used for income tax purposes. Some have also been made about the length of time taken to deal with claims from the self-employed. We have been monitoring the position since the introduction of family credit in 1988 and have introduced a number of changes to help the self-employed, the principal one was to amend the legislation relating to the acceptability of business accounts as evidence.

We are commissioning in-depth research into the self-employed in family credit, which will pay particular attention to the way in which the amount of business income is determined.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time for processing family credit claims from the day the claim is received to the first day of payment of an award in the case of (a) employees and (b) self-employed.

Mr. Jack: Information is available only for the average time from receipt of the claim to when the decision is made. On this basis, the latest information, for the 12 months ended December 1990, about average clearance times is as follows:

	working days
All claims	20·45
Employees	18·73
Self-employed	30·19

Order books are usually issued on the working day following the decision and should be received by payees on the next day.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the average wages of current recipients of family credit; and what is the average duration of family credit awards.

Mr. Jack: For the end of May 1990, the latest date for which information is available, the average gross weekly earnings in cases in which the main earner was an employee was £108·36. The corresponding figure for all cases, including the self-employed, was £102·12.

Family credit is awarded for a fixed duration of 26 weeks. At the end of the award period a fresh claim has to be made and, if benefit is awarded, it will again last for 26 weeks.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims were received by his Department for (a) attendance allowance and (b) mobility allowance in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

	[1] Attendance allowance	[2] Mobility allowance
1988	362,000	240,000
1989	365,000	242,000
1990	[3]—	240,000

[1] Initial claims only.
[2] Includes renewal and subsequent claims.
[3] Not yet available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures for the numbers of attendance allowance reviews resulting in an increased award from the lower to the higher rate.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the total number of awards of attendance allowance, including renewal claims, where the award changed from the lower to the higher rate for the 12-month period ending 30 September 1990 was 31,000.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current success rate on renewal claims for (a) attendance allowance and (b) mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: There were 42,000 renewal claims of mobility allowance in 1990. During the same period there were 33,000 awards on such claims. Information for attendance allowance is not available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action will be taken by the Department subsequent to the recent commissioner's decision CA/380/1990 relating to attendance allowance in respect of children to (a) alert those people whose claims were refused, (b) contact others who would have been entitled but were deterred from making a claim by the age bar and (c) pay benefit to those who were entitled but are now outside the time limit for claiming.

Mr. Scott: We are considering all the implications of this decision.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details on the training and follow-on training received by examining doctors and adjudicating medical practitioners on the new deaf-blind rules in mobility allowance; and what monitoring has been carried out by his Department to ensure that examining doctors and adjudicating medical authorities are following departmental guidance when dealing with claims for mobility allowance under the deaf-blind rules.

Mr. Scott: Following the introduction of the new deaf-blind rules in mobility allowance, notes for examining doctors were issued in the form of an insert added to each examination report, both for examining doctors and adjudicating medical authorities. This insert gives guidance on the way the new rules should be applied.

Adjudication officers monitor the doctors' reports, and bring to the attention of the Department's senior medical officer any problems which arise. If it is apparent that any doctor requires further training, it is given. Reports by adjudicating medical authorities are examined by the Department's full-time medical staff and, again, any problems are brought to the attention of the senior medical officer.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, according to the most recent figures available, how many attendance allowance claimants had their award withdrawn or interrupted in 1989 and 1990 on the grounds of living in scheduled accommodation.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many attendance claims in respect of children under two years of age were received by the Department (a) from April 1990 to December 1990 and (b) from March 1970 to March 1990.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available, but 6,100 claims in respect of children under two years were processed in the period April 1990 to December 1990.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the numbers of invalid care allowance recipients who are (a) entitled and (b) potentially entitled to income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit;

(2) how many invalid care allowance claims have been disqualified on account of the overlapping benefits regulations; and how many of these claims were received (a) prior to 1 October 1990 and (b) after 1 October 1990;

(3) how many invalid care allowance claimants would be entitled to the carer's premium were it not for the overlapping benefits regulations.

Miss Widdecombe: At the time of the May 1989 annual statistical inquiry, some 23,000 income support recipients declared receipt of invalid care allowance. It is estimated that, at the same time, the number of households where the claimant and/or the partner was in receipt of housing benefit, but excluding community charge rebate, in Great Britain was around 6,000. The number of invalid care allowance recipients who would qualify for income support, housing benefit or community charge benefit if they claimed it is not known. Just over 10,000 claims to invalid care allowance have been disqualified solely on account of the overlapping benefits regulations, of which around 150 have been dealt with after 1 October 1990. From 1 October 1990, when the carer premium was introduced, all invalid care allowance claimants, who do not qualify for that benefit solely because of the overlapping benefits regulations, are entitled to the carer premium in income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Disability Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who will be the medical members on the proposed new disability appeals tribunals.

Mr. Scott: The medical members on the proposed new disability appeal tribunals will be drawn from a panel of medical practitioners appointed by the president of the social security and medical appeal and disability appeal tribunals.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the organisations which responded to the Department's recent consultation on the proposed assessment and adjudication procedures for the disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement on the responses received and on the action he plans to take in the light of these responses.

Mr. Scott: A list of organisations that responded is in the table. In addition, responses were received from other Government Departments and from individual members of the public.

The proposals in the consultation document received widespread support. The move from medical examination toward self-assessment was welcomed unanimously by the organisations representing disabled people, as was the greater emphasis on evidence from health or education professionals familiar with the claimant. The new three-tier adjudication system, giving access to an independent appeal tribunal—the newly constituted Disability Appeal Tribunal—was also seen as a major improvement.

Many organisations made helpful suggestions concerning the claim procedure, aimed at helping to ensure the success of this innovative new system. We are taking close account of these suggestions in drawing up our detailed plans for implementation; and we shall be consulting further, both with disabled people and with their representative organisations, about the claim form and the claim procedure.

Disabled People

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people with disabilities in paid employment work (a) less than eight hours, (b) fewer than 16 hours and (c) more than 16 hours.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that the numbers of people with disabilities in paid work are (a) 20,000 people working fewer than eight hours, (b) 70,000 people working fewer than 16 hours, and (c) 575,000 people working more than 16 hours.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of a disability-related benefit have mortgage commitments.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated from the family expenditure survey that about 300,000 recipients of the main disability-related benefits have mortgages.

Retirement Pension Forecast Unit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will detail the number of inquiries for each of the last three calendar years received by his retirement pension forecast unit; and if he will detail the number of these inquiries which came from women divorcees seeking information on their pension entitlement.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table:

Year	Number of inquiries
	Total	Those coming from divorced women
[1,2]1988	154,406	17,197
1989	327,944	36,525
1990	330,080	36,822

[2] The Pensions Forecast Unit was set up in May 1988.

SCOTLAND

River Pollution

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times LAW Mining has been convicted for polluting rivers with its opencast coaling operations; and if he will give details of decisions against the company.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available from departmental records. I am, however, informed by the Clyde river purification board that LAW Mining was convicted on three occasions between 1986 and 1989 for water pollution offences resulting from opencast coaling operations at Rigmuir and Dykend; fines of £100, £750 and £1,000 were imposed.

Housing Associations

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the level of direct Government funding for housing associations in Scotland in each year since 1978-79 in real terms.

£ million

Year	Housing association grant	Revenue grant	Housing association grant (at 1989-90 prices)	Revenue grant (at 1989-90 prices)
	Cash terms	Cash terms	Real terms	Real terms
1978-79	22·7	1·6	53·1	3·74
1979-80	35·5	0·8	71·2	1·60

1989-90	202·6	1·2	202·6	1·20

Since 1 April 1989, Scottish Homes has been responsible for the payment of grants to registered housing associations.

Carstairs Hospital

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of patients at the state hospital at Carstairs in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of patients as at 31 December in each year was as follows:

	Number
1979	305
1980	328
1981	310
1982	291
1983	268
1984	248
1985	234
1986	227
1987	210
1988	216
1989	229
1990	222

Community Charge

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of extra staff taken on by Scottish local authorities for the collection and administration of the community charge; and if he will provide a breakdown by local authority.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Mentally Ill People (Day Centres)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many registered voluntary organisation day centres for the mentally ill there are in Scotland; where they are; and how many places they have;

(2) how many registered local authority day centres for the mentally ill there are in Scotland; where they are; and how many places they have.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest information, based on reports made to the social work services group, relates to 31 March 1989 and is shown in the table.

Region and sector	Number of centres	Number of places	Number attending
Lothian local authority	1	50	300
Strathclyde local authority	1	35	93
Tayside registered voluntary	2	135	121

A small number of persons who were not mentally ill attended the above centres; and about 30 mentally ill people attended day centres provided mainly for the mentally handicapped.

Secondary School Teachers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost of employing an unpromoted teacher in a Scottish secondary school.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average salary cost, including national insurance and superannuation contributions, of an unpromoted teacher in Scottish secondary schools in the current financial year is estimated to be £17,790, from information received from the secretariat of the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee for Teaching Staff in School Education.

Assisted Places

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of pupils receive 100 per cent. payment of private school fees on the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that some 43·5 per cent. of pupils who benefit under the scheme received full fee remission in the current school session.

Education Buildings

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reserves are being made available to local authorities in Scotland for educational building in each of the next three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The three-year programme for capital expenditure on education will be contained in the departmental report which will be published shortly. My right hon. Friend announced his broad decisions on expenditure priorities on 4 December.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the relevant expenditure for local authorities on which grant from the Scottish Office would be paid in every year since 1979 at 1990-91 prices;

(2) what was the total grant paid to Scottish local authorities by the Scottish Office in each year since 1979 at 1990-91 prices;

(3) what is the total grant to Scottish local authorities expressed as a percentage of total relevant expenditure in each year since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table:

	(1) RSG £ million	(2) Specific Grants £ million	(3) Aggregate Grants (1) + (2) £ million	(4) Aggregate Grants in real terms £ million	(5) Expenditure £ million	(6) Expenditure in real terms £ million	(7) Grant as percentage of Expenditure

Notes:

1. The figures in column 1 represent the original amount of rate or revenue support grant awarded for each year. These may have been subject to a later redetermination.
2. In column (5) the figures are for current expenditure including loan and leasing charges and are at final outturn to 1988-89, provisional outturn for 1989-90 and budget estimate for 1990-91.
3. Conversion to real terms figures in columns 4 and 6 is by means of the Treasury GDP deflator (October 1990). All years are at 1990-91 prices.
4. Non-domestic rate income is excluded on the grounds that, although since 1989-90 the level of NDRI has been controlled by central government and formed part of aggregate external finance, this was not the case in earlier years when business rate levels were set by local authorities.

Local Enterprise Company Areas

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the combined budget of the Scottish Development Agency and Training Agency in each of Scottish Enterprise's local enterprise company areas in 1989-90 and 1990-91;

(2) what was the combined budget of the Highlands and Islands Development Board and Training Agency in each of the Highlands and Islands Enterprise's local enterprise company areas in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not available.

School Leavers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of school leavers attained (i) university minimum entrance qualifications and (ii) no qualifications in Scotland in 1990 or the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The percentage of school leavers who left during session 1988-89, having attained university minimum entrance qualifications—three or more highers—was 24·4 per cent. and the percentage leaving with no qualifications was 11·9 per cent. These are the latest figures available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of school leavers left at ages (i) 16 years, (ii) 17 years, and (iii) 18 years or later in Scotland in 1990 or the latest available year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is listed in the table. This was published by the Scottish Office Education Department in its statistical bulletin: "School Leavers (No. 13/E2/1990)" which is available in the Library.

School Leavers in 1988-89 by age at 31 December

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which locations in the world the Scottish Development Agency has direct, on-the-spot representation by (a) an employee and (b) an agent; and how these arrangements have changed in the past 10 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The international service group of the Scottish Development Agency has one direct representative in the United States of America, and indirect representation in Bulgaria, Poland, Hungary and the USSR. These arrangements have all been established since 1988.

In addition, through its joint sponsorship of Locate in Scotland with the Scottish Office Industry Department, the Scottish Development Agency also has direct representation by employees in the USA—in Stamford, San Mateo, Houston and Chicago—Japan, Hong Kong and Brussels; and indirectly in Australia and Korea. These arrangements have developed and altered over the period since the formation of Locate in Scotland in 1981.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his community care policy for the mentally ill includes an increase in the provision of capital resources for either local authorities or voluntary organisations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Capital grant amounting to £196,000 has been made available in the present financial year to voluntary organisations developing mental health services. This compares with £143,500 in 1989-90. Final decisions have yet to be taken on the allocation of capital grant for 1991-92.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers have taken early retirement in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following table sets out the numbers of male and female teachers in Scotland who retired on pension before age 60, for reasons of ill-health and for reasons of redundancy or the interests of efficiency, for each of the years 1978-79 to 1988-89, the last year for which figures are available.

Year	Male		Female		Total
	Redundancy/ interests of efficiency	Ill-health	Redundancy/ interests of efficiency	Ill-health
1978-79	7	30	5	58	100

Hospitals, South Ayrshire

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who has expressed an interest in national health service status for the South Ayrshire unit comprising the hospitals at Ayr and Ballochmyle.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January 1991]: The expression of interest in self-governing status for the South Ayrshire unit was formally submitted by the unit general manager. Work on the preparation of business plans is now under way.

Community Charge

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in respect of the 1989-90 community charge transitional relief scheme for Strathclyde regional council (a) how many applications have been received, (b) how many applications have been approved, (c) to how many applicants payment of rebate has been made and (d) how much in total has been paid out in rebates.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 15 January 1991]: Regional and islands councils are required to provide information of the kind requested, together with information on relief paid to former ratepayers who receive relief automatically, in their claims for reimbursement to the Department. No such claim has yet been received from Strathclyde and the information requested is therefore not yet available centrally.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many undergraduates entered the university of Dundee in the 1990-91 academic year; and how many of these were from (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

The following provisional information has been obtained from the university of Dundee.

First-year undergraduates at university of Dundee 1990-91 academic year

TRANSPORT

Disability

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to make it a road traffic offence for able-bodied motorists to park in bays designated for special use by disabled people which are situated either on public highways or car parks serving public buildings.

Mr. Chope: It is already an offence for an able-bodied person to use a parking place reserved for an orange badge holder on the public highway or in a local authority off-street car park which has been designated by an Order made under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The offence carries a maximum penalty of £400.

My Department has no jurisdiction over spaces in private car parks reserved for disabled people. It is for individual operators of these car parks to take whatever steps they consider necessary to see that these spaces are not misused.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Civil Aviation Authority to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that my hon. Friend has proposed such an exhibition, which I warmly welcome.

"Vital Transport Statistics 1990"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report "Vital Travel Statistics 1990" prepared for Transport 2000 in December 1990.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

ENVIRONMENT

Hong Kong

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instigate a study of the work of the independent commission against corruption in Hong Kong; and if he will bring forward proposals to create a similar body to monitor corruption in local Government.

Mr. Key: We consider the existing powers and responsibilities of the Audit Commission and local authority auditors to be adequate.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of departmental circular 1990/21 on local authority responsibilities for public access to information under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, as amended by the Environmental Protection Act 1990, have been printed; and to which individuals and organisations it has been distributed.

Mr. Baldry: A total of 5,500 copies of the circular have been printed. Copies have been distributed to all local authorities at county and district level and to local authority associations in England and Wales.

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future use of County hall, London, SE1.

Mr. Key: Following my answer to the hon. Member on 23 November 1990 at column 226, we announced on 6 December the reopening of the public inquiry on 15 January 1991. The inquiry is in progress.

Housing Investment (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amounts allocated to Liverpool's housing investment programme in each year from 1979 to 1991 inclusive, indicating the change as a percentage each year in real terms.

Mr. Yeo: Liverpool's housing investment programme allocations since 1979-80 are as follows. The percentage changes reflect 1990-91 as the base year for real term calculations.

	Actual allocation £ million	Percentage change in real terms
1979-80	42·430	—
1980-81	47·172	− 6·125
1981-82	39·788	−23·079
1982-83	49·337	+15·774
1983-84	41·853	−18·918
1984-85	38·499	−12·460
1985-86	31·000	−23·636
1986-87	27·500	−14·222
1987-88	24·800	−14·476
1988-89	19·653	−26·144
1989-90	15·240	−27·101
1990-91	27·677	+68·155
1991-92	23·400	−20·238

The actual allocations exclude the £24·267 million Liverpool have received from the estate action programme since 1988-89.

Since 1981 authorities have also been able to spend substantial resources generated through the right to buy programme.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the housing investment programme for Liverpool in the light of that city's commitments under the defective housing legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I have no plans to review Liverpool's housing investment programme allocation. We have taken account of the city's commitments under the housing defects legislation in determining the allocation.

"Greening the Machinery of Government"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Evironment when he received a copy of the report "Greening the Machinery of Government"; and whether he intends to make any response to the proposals contained in the report.

Mr. Baldry: The director of Friends of the Earth wrote to my right hon. Friend on 20 December enclosing a copy of the report. He will reply to the letter shortly.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is ready to issue a response to the Countryside Commission's policy statement on areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is grateful to the Countryside Commission for revising and updating their policy statement on AONBs and for the opportunity it gives the Government to restate our policies towards the protection and promotion of these valuable areas. Copies of the full text of our response to the Commission's statement have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

AONBs are an important element in this Government's commitment to protect the countryside—for the sake of its beauty, for its diversity of landscape and the wealth of its natural resources, and for its ecological, agricultural and recreational value. The Commission's statement is an important step forward in the protection and enhancement of the countryside and we look forward to seeing it positively applied by all involved.

The formal recognition of the national importance of the natural beauty of an area conferred by AONB designation should be reflected by local authorities in their preparation of structure and local plans and in the exercise of their development control functions. We support the Commission's proposals for statements of intent further to clarify the role and purpose of designation for new AONBs and for management plans to be prepared for existing areas.

We also endorse the Commission's proposals for joint advisory committees and for the appointment of officers to co-ordinate and promote local policies towards each AONB. Following the Government's very generous increase in the commission's grant-in-aid for 1991-92 announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement, we expect to see its programme to appoint AONB officers in 1991-92 expanded and plans for future years brought forward.

Buying Agency

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the future of the Buying agency, the Liverpool-based public procurement agency.

Sir George Young: Following last summer's announcement of the closure of the Crown Suppliers contract furnishing division, we have reviewed the prospects for the Buying agency and concluded that it should become a "next steps" agency as soon as practicable after 1 April 1991.

DEFENCE

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice or guidance he intends to give to the forces about the use of irradiated food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date the Ministry of Defence has not knowingly procured food treated by ionising radiation. Of the classes of food which, under the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990, may now be irradiated we do not envisage large scale procurement of such products, given the current high cost involved in processing food in such a way. However, if we were to purchase permitted irradiated foods, we would follow the requirements detailed in the Food Labelling (Amendment) (Irradiated Food) Regulations 1990.

Armed Forces (Equipment and Manpower)

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will impose a moratorium for the time being on any further rundown in equipment or manpower for the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are continuing to refine the detail of the broad proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in July. In doing so we are mindful of the need to sustain both the effectiveness and morale of British forces in the Gulf.

The Gulf

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current approximate daily cost of British involvement in the Gulf area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 16 January the approximate full daily operating cost of our forces in the Gulf area was estimated to be £3·6 million per day.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Meteorological Office has assessed the possible environmental impacts of oil wells in Kuwait being set alight during any hostilities in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Meteorological Office has produced a note for the Government on the possible environmental impacts of burning oil wells in Kuwait. I am placing a copy of this note in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be taking forward further work on this subject.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 30 November, Official Report, column 537, if he has any further information on decisions taken by the Supreme Soviet on methods of destruction of chemical weapons; and whether the United Kingdom offered the Soviet Union any technical assistance in the matter.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the subject of chemical weapons destruction is still under discussion within the Supreme Soviet with no final decision having yet been made on the nature and location of chemical weapons destruction facilities.

The United States-Soviet bilateral agreement signed on 1 June 1990 allows for exchange of destruction technology between the State parties. In the past the United Kingdom has described to the Soviet Union the methods that we have used to destroy our chemical weapons.

Operation Granby

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to date of British involvement in Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total full operating cost to 16 January of the United Kingdom's military involvement in the Gulf is estimated to be in excess of £900 million.

Medical Reservists

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the response to his call up of medical reservists; how many of those who volunteered were accepted and how many compulsory call out notices were issued; how many reservists compulsorily called up did not respond and what action is being taken against them; what are the skills of those who have volunteered or been called up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am pleased to be able to report that the call-out of medical reservists was successful and that the requirement was met in full. In the case of the Army, 894 vacancies were filled by volunteers. Compulsory call-out notices were sent to a further 408 medical personnel, and 126 personnel were compulsorily called out.

A total of 94 Army reservists failed to respond to the call-out notice. We are still investigating the reasons. Some will have been ill or out of the country. However, we cannot rule out the possibility that legal action may be brought against the few who cannot provide an adequate explanation of their failure to attend.

The Army reservists are medical specialists with a variety of skills, including surgeons, doctors, anaesthetists, dentists, nurses, physiotherapists and medical technicians.

Turning to the RAF, I am also pleased to say that the compulsory call-out of No. 4626 aeromedical evacuation squadron of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force was successful. Call-out notices were issued to all squadron personnel who all responded and made themselves available at their unit. The squadron comprises doctors, nurses, medical assistants and support staff.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Offices, Essex

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what employment offices he has plans to close in Essex; and if he will give in each case grounds.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each civil defence region (a) the name of the current chief regional scientific adviser, (b) the date of appointment of the current chief regional scientific adviser, (c) the age of the current chief regional scientific adviser, (d) the employment of the current chief regional scientific adviser at the time of his appointment as chief regional scientific adviser and (e) the amounts paid to each chief regional scientific adviser in each of the last five years in the form of salary, retainer and expenses.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office has responsibility for appointing a chief regional scientific adviser (CRSA) for the nine home defence regions in England and Wales. The Scottish Home and Health Department and Northern Ireland Office have similar responsibilities for their own home defence regions.

CRSAs are not paid either a salary or a retainer as part of their civil defence duties. They are paid expenses as professional lecturing fees together with costs for travel and subsistence in the course of civil defence activities.

A table giving the details requested for each of the CRSAs in England and Wales has been placed in the Library.

Satellites

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future ownership and use of the Marco Polo satellite.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: British Sky Broadcasting operates five television channels on DBS frequencies via the Marco Polo satellite, which it owns. Under the terms of an agreement to be entered into between the Independent Television Commission and BSkyB, the DBS programme contract originally entered into between the Independent Broadcasting Authority and British Satellite Broadcasting Ltd. would be allowed to run until 30 December 1992. From 30 June 1991 the ITC would be able to withdraw all or any or part of any of the DBS channels for use by domestic satellite licensees appointed by it under the terms of the Broadcasting Act 1990. BSkyB would make capacity on the Marco Polo satellites available to such licensees until the end of 1992 and beyond.

Child Refugees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is the considered policy of Her Majesty's Government to admit child refugees from Eritrea and elsewhere who have no means of supporting themselves in Britain; what representations he has received from London local authorities about the cost of their support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All applications for asylum in the United Kingdom from individuals claiming to be refugees are assessed against the criteria of the 1951 United Nations convention on refugees. Age is no bar to qualifications for refugee status and applications from children are considered individually on their merits. Child applicants, like adult asylum seekers, may remain here while their applications are determined. With regard to representations made by London local authorities, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for Health on 17 December 1990 at column 62.

Mr. Michael Thynne

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects the Parole Board to carry out the review of the life sentence passed upon Mr. Michael Thynne, currently detained in Her Majesty's prison, Bristol.

Mrs. Rumbold: Mr. Thynne's case will be referred to the local review committee at the prison where he is then detained in February 1992 as the first stage of a further review by the Parole Board.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether proposals for changes to the magistrates courts system will extend beyond administrative improvements to existing arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have not yet reached decisions on the reorganisation proposals in the report of the scrutiny of magistrates courts. We are still considering the views expressed by interested bodies in the light of the assessment by independent consultants last year of the costs of implementation.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that savings obtained through the cash limiting of the magistrates courts in England and Wales will not reduce the efficiency of the magistrates courts system or prolong judicial processes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are consulting the representative bodies of the magistrates courts service and the local authority associations about the mechanics of cash limiting current grant. The proposals underpinning the consultations envisage the allocation of grant to magistrates' courts committee areas by a formula based on variables including the number of weighted cases completed in those areas and which is intended not only to reflect the different needs of different committees in providing a standard level of service but also to create incentives for the more effective and efficient management of court business without interfering with the courts' independent judicial functions.

Community Charge

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constables of Greater Manchester, Merseyside, Northumbria, South Yorkshire, West Midlands and West Yorkshire about the effects of plans to cap the community charge in their areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chief constables of Greater Manchester, Merseyside, Northumbria, South Yorkshire and West Midlands, and the deputy chief constable of West Yorkshire, wrote to the then Home Secretary before Christmas about their financial concerns. My noble friend Lord Ferrers met the chief constable of West Midlands among other members of a delegation from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 18 December to discuss these issues.

Breath Tests

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report (a) the total number of breath tests conducted by each of the police forces in England and Wales during the period covering the recent festive season and (b) the number which proved positive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The official breath test statistics for 1990 will not be available until later this year. The Association of Chief Police Officers has, however, collected provisional figures for the number of screening breath tests, along with the positive results, carried out in each police force area between 19 December 1990 and 1 January 1991. These are given in the table:

Police force area	Number of breath tests	Total positive breath tests
Avon and Somerset	754	113
Bedfordshire	962	54
Cambridgeshire	1,600	47
Cheshire	1,032	106

Broadcasting (Programme Information)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the chair and members of the Independent Television Commission regarding the intention of the television and radio franchise holders to charge newspapers for programme information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has not held any discussions with the chairman or members of the Independent Television Commission on this issue. The use of programme information is a matter for commercial arrangements between broadcasters and those who wish to publish the information. The Broadcasting Act 1990 makes provision for adjudication by the copyright tribunal if a publisher considers that the fee being charged by the broadcaster is unreasonable.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Efficiency

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North dated 18 December 1990, Official Report, column 132, if he will show the efficiency in terms of gross value added per annual labour unit of agriculture and all other major sectors of industry in Britain.

Mr. Curry: Information on gross value added per head in other sectors of industry in the United Kingdom is contained in pages 10-37 of the "Business Monitor: Report on the Census of Production—Summary Volume, 1988", available in the Library of the House. These estimates are not fully comparable with those for agriculture contained in my reply of 18 December: they relate to total numbers employed whereas, for agriculture, the denominator is annual labour units (reflecting full time worker equivalents). Furthermore, comparisons between sectors should be interpreted cautiously because of the differing degrees of support and protection embodied in the value added of each sector and because of different deployments of labour and capital.

Food Safety

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has given to local authorities about the operation of the new food safety regulations which implement the Food Safety Act 1990.

Mr. Gummer: Under section 40 of the Food Safety Act Ministers may issue codes of practice for local authorities on the enforcement of the Act and regulations made under it. Seven codes of practice on a range of enforcement aspects were issued to come into operation on 1 January 1991. Copies of the codes have been placed in the Library of the House. Further codes are in preparation.

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the outcome of his examination of the relationship between the new committees on microbiological safety of food and the existing committees in the food area.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. I have concluded a change in the terms of references is required in order to take account of the new committees. Consequently the revised terms of reference for the Food Advisory Committee are:

"To assess the risk to humans of chemicals which are used or occur in or on food and to advise Ministers on the exercise of powers in the Food Safety Act 1990 relating to the labelling, composition and chemical safety of food. In exercising its functions the Food Advisory Committee will take the advice and work of the Committee on Toxicity and other relevant advisory committees into account."

In addition, the Steering Group for Food Surveillance is to be renamed the Steering Group on Chemical Aspects of Food Surveillance and its revised terms of reference are: "to identify through surveillance the need for action to ensure the chemical safety and nutritional adequacy of food".

Fisheries Council

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Fisheries Council meeting, held on 19 and 20 December 1990.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom secured a good package consistent with conservation at the December Council.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of when irradiated food will be on sale in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Since the possibility of licensing under the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1991 was introduced only on 1 January it is too early for any meaningful estimate to be made.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of farmers who have received payment under the set-aside scheme for (a) tourist facilities, (b) football ptiches, (c) golf courses, (d) game reserves and (e) nature reserves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, the following break-down of set-aside undertakings under the non-agricultural use option may be of assistance:

Total number of undertakings relating to land set aside under the non-agricultural use option in England in the first two years of the scheme

	Number	Per cent.
Horse-based activities (including livery stables, riding schools, stud farms, etc)	536	(76)
Golf courses	46	(7)
Game cover for commercial shoots	32	(5)
Sports grounds	24	(3)
Recreational facilities (including camping sites, nature trails, etc)	15	(2)
Other	54	(7)
Total	707	(100)

Note: Set-aside entrants may enter more than one non-agricultural use option.

Veterinary Investigations Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his plans following his review of the veterinary investigations service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The review has been a very thorough one and its implications needed to be considered in detail. Those considerations are now in their final stages and I expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Milk Imports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the dates when China, Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Tunisia, Turkey and the USSR restricted imports of milk; if he will list the quantities of milk imported from the United Kingdom for the full year prior to the restriction being imposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The dates when the countries in question restricted imports of milk and milk products from the United Kingdom were:

	Date
China	[1]precise date unknown
Egypt	1 July 1990
Jordan	[2]29 July 1990
Syria	[3]29 August 1990
Tunisia	20 January 1990
Turkey	25 May 1990
USSR	10 April 1990

[1] Notification received 30 October 1990.
[2] Notification received 3 September 1990.
[3] Notification received 14 January 1991.

The quantities of milk and milk products imported from the United Kingdom for the previous full year (1989) were, in tonnes:

	Milk, cream and other milk products (other than butter or cheese)	Butter and other fats and oils derived from milk	Cheese and curd
China	2,718	—	—
Egypt	1,334	175	141
Jordan	550	34	26
Syria	—	—	—
Tunisia	—	—	—
Turkey	118	2	39
USSR	—	1	—

We have been in frequent contact with all the countries which have imposed restrictions. Both the European Community and the Office International des Epizooties (OIE) have clearly stated that milk and milk products present no risk from BSE.

With the help of these bodies we shall continue to make every effort to have these unjustified restrictions lifted.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to set a final date for the notification of milk quota transfers in England and Wales in 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: Following consultations with the industry and in exercise of powers provided by the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations I have decided that milk quota transfers notified after 22 April will have no effect on the calculation of supplementary levy liability for 1990-91, even if they are notified as having occurred during that year.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantities of (a) grain and (b) butter were held in intervention stores in (i) Humberside and (ii) Lincolnshire at the latest available date and the equivalent date one year ago.

Mr. Curry: Since the question concerns matters which are the direct responsibility of the chief executive of the Intervention Board, I am asking him to write directly to the hon. Member.

Wildlife and Landscape Conservation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates and locations of (a) national and (b) regional training courses on wildlife and landscape conservation that have been held for Agricultural Development Advisory Service officers in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: National and regional training courses on landscape and wildlife conservation held in 1990 for Agricultural Development and Advisory Service advisers were as follows:

Location	Date
National courses
Worcestershire	February
London	March
Shropshire	June
Shropshire	September
Shropshire	September
Shropshire	November
Regional courses
Yorkshire	May
Yorkshire	May
Worcestershire	May
Warwickshire	June
Warwickshire	June
Somerset	June
West Sussex	July
Dyfed	September
Cambridgeshire	November

This programme of training courses proved sufficient in practice to ensure that all ADAS officers received appropriate training in landscape and wildlife conservation. For this reason two of the proposed regional training courses referred to in an earlier answer to the hon. Member did not take place.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North dated 23 November 1990, Official Report, column 217, if he will show the total expenditure on State education in actual and 1989 prices, in 1961, 1970, 1980 and 1989, showing the per cent. increase at 1989 prices; and the amount spent on teachers' salaries and related costs in each case, in actual 1989 prices and in per cent. terms, and also the per cent. increase in each case since 1980.

Mr. Eggar: Data for 1961 are not readily available. The earliest year for which data are available on a comparable basis is 1968-69. The data for that and the subsequent years on total education spending, and on spending on school teachers' salaries in England, are as follows:

Total education spending

	Cash terms	1989-90 prices	Increase over previous year	Increase since 1980
	£ billion	£ billion	Per cent.	Per cent.
1968-69	2·1	15·2	—	—
1970-71	2·6	16·5	9	—
1980-81	12·9	21·9	33	—
1988-89	22·0	23·4	7	7
1989-90	24·1	24·1	3	10

Teachers' salaries

	Cash terms	1989-90 prices	Increase over previous year	Increase since 1980
	£ billion	£ billion	Per cent.	Per cent.
1968-69	0·5	3·7	—	—
1970-71	0·6	4·1	11	—
1980-81	3·7	6·3	54	—
1988-89	6·6	7·0	11	11
1989-90	n/a	n/a	—	—

Notes to tables:

1. The total education spending figures are drawn from the education tables of the relevant Public Expenditure White Papers.
2. The figures for spending on teachers' salaries are drawn from local authority spending returns. Data for 1989-90 are not yet available. Spending on teachers' salaries includes on-costs such as superannuation. No account is taken of changes in teacher numbers over the period shown.
3. The columns headed "increase over previous year" show the increase in spending at 1989-90 prices over the previous year.
4. The figures at 1989-90 prices have been calculated using latest GDP deflators.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to his reply of 14 January, if he will give a breakdown of the courses taken by the 900 Iraqi postgraduate students who attended British universities during 1986-87;

(2) how many students from Iraq are enrolled on postgraduate courses at British universities and colleges of higher education during the current university year; and if he will give a breakdown of the courses they are attending.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Under-fives

Ms. Hilary Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1990, Official Report, columns 491-92, when he expects the information for 1990 on the percentage of under-fives in nursery schools, nursery classes and infant classes by local education authority in England to be available.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested for January 1990 is given in the following table:

THE ARTS

London Arts Board

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he expects to announce the chairman for the London Arts Board; and if he will make a statement on the future of the London Arts Board.

Mr. Tim Renton: I expect to receive proposals concerning the London Arts Board from the Arts Council in due course.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report up-to-date figures, using 1990-91 prices, but otherwise on the same basis as those provided in his answer to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) of 10 January 1989, Official Report, columns 624-47.

Mr. Maude: Updated figures for 1990-91 are given in the table. For earlier years, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 5 July 1990 jat column 699. The figures given in that reply at 1988-89 prices may be converted to 1990-91 prices in line with the Autumn Statement forecast by multiplying by a factor of 1·19.

Notes to tables

(1) Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax relief other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

(2) From 1990-91 husbands and wives will be taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years the table therefore shows income tax and National Insurance Contributions paid by a married couple in 1990-91 as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60 : 40.

(3) In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowances, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.

(4) Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are estimated to be £307·90 per week in 1990-91, using the Government Actuary Department's assumption of 10 per cent. growth over 1989-90 as published in the 1990 autumn statement.

(5) The estimates of indirect taxes are derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

Football Clubs

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Football League clubs took advantage of the Inland Revenue's amnesty on illegal payments to players; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: There was no such amnesty.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made with the Bank of England inquiry into developments both before and after the announcement of Britain's entry into the exchange rate mechanism on 5 October.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the answer that my right hon. Friend the then Chancellor gave to the hon. Gentleman on 23 October 1990 at column 196. If the hon. Gentleman has any evidence that the decision to join the ERM was prematurely disclosed, he should declare it to the appropriate authorities.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the public expenditure planning total for 1991-92.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Secretaries of State for the Environment, Scotland and Wales have today announced increases in central Government expenditure on a new scheme for community charge reduction and other forms of support for local authorities of some £1·1 billion in 1991-92, net of savings on community charge benefit.

The £1·1 billion net increase in central Government support for local authorities will be added to next year's public expenditure planning total. There will, however, be no change in projected local authority expenditure as a result of this switch in financing, and therefore no increase in total public expenditure as measured by general government expenditure (GGE). Local authority expenditure will continue moreover to be subject to capping.

On financing, the Government's strategy remains to balance the budget over the medium term. The decisions announced today do not alter that policy and will be taken into account in framing the Budget proposals.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Management Training (Czechoslovakia)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the sector reconnaisance mission on management training to Czechoslovakia.

Mrs. Chalker: I have today placed copies in the Library.

Educational Projects (Czechoslovakia)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cash value of the know-how fund for educational projects in Czechoslovakia; and whether he will list those United Kingdom organisations who have been awarded contracts under it, giving the purpose and duration of each project and its pound sterling value.

Mrs. Chalker: Expenditure under the know-how fund for Czechoslovakia in 1990-91 is estimated at £2 million. Projects designed to transfer know-how to Czechoslovakia are listed below by sector, including the name of the United Kingdom organisation responsible for project implementation.

ENERGY

Power Failures, East Midlands

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he next expects to meet the chair of the East Midlands Electricity Consumer Committee to discuss the blizzard of 8 December 1990 and the number of supply interruptions and the rate of reconnections;

(2) when he next expects to meet the chairman of the East Midlands Electricity Company to discuss the impact of the 8 December 1990 blizzard and the response thereto.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet either at present. My Department monitored the situation throughout the restoration of supplies. The East Midlands Electricity Consumer Committee has not requested a meeting.

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) 12 December, Official Report, column 397, he will set out the definition of civil spent nuclear fuel as used in the context of international nuclear safeguards to which he makes reference.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The expression "civil spent nuclear fuel" used in my answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 12 December 1990 at column 397 referred to irradiated fuel arising from the operation of reactors in the United Kingdom civil nuclear industry and irradiated fuel from overseas, stored in the United Kingdom before reprocessing.

Kuwaiti Oilfields

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been conducted by his Department or consultants to his Department on the effects of the mining or bombing of the Kuwaiti oilfields, in terms of (a) oil resource depletion, (b) the stability of crude oil prices and (c) environmental pollution, including effects on global warming.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has not carried out any detailed studies on the possible effects of the mining or bombing of the Kuwaiti oilfields for oil resource depletion or the stability of crude oil prices. However, it seems unlikely that there would be any significant short term consequences for oil supplies, bearing in mind that crude from Kuwait is not at present available to world markets.

The Meteorological Office has conducted a preliminary study into the environmental effects. This concludes that even in the worst case scenario the effects on global warming would be almost negligible. Arrangements have been made for a copy of their note to be placed in the Library of the House.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the gross provision for the Welsh Development Agency in every year since 1979 and the provision intended for 1991-92; expressed at 1990-91 price levels.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Gross Mainstream Provision

(£ million)

	Cash	1990-91 Prices[1]
1979-80	35·1	76·0
1980-81	65·7	120·2

The Laurels, Bronllys

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the amount spent by Powys health authority on refitting The Laurels, Bronllys, as office accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. This is a matter for Powys health authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes an urgent review concerning the teaching of maths and the teaching of science, after the age of 14 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We intend to review the structure of the attainment targets for both maths and science for pupils of all ages in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Educationa and Science.

School Subjects

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for the introduction of a more feasible range of subjects for pupils after the age of 14 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We intend to make a statement shortly.

Reading Standards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessments he has made in each of the years since 1980 of reading standards in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what policies he has followed to increase the standard of reading in local education authority schools in Wales;

(3) what action he has taken in each of the local education authorities in Wales to encourage improved standards in reading; if he will list the measurements and assessments he has made of reading standards in Wales in each of the years since 1980; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what initiatives he will take to improve reading standards in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to him on 10 July 1990.

An assessment of reading standards is carried out as part of all Her Majesty's inspectors inspections of primary schools and, since 1983, I have arranged for all reports to be published. In addition to these reports, which recently have numbered around 40 per year, the assessment and performance unit (APU) published the results of their survey into language performance of pupils in 1981 and 1982. These assessments have been further supplemented throughout the period by Her Majesty's inspectorate (England and Wales) discussion and advisory papers in the "Curriculum Matters" series and "Aspects of Primary Education". Her Majesty's inspectorate Wales also published its own report "Aspects of Reading in English in the Junior Schools" in February 1989.

The teaching of English as a core foundation subject within the national curriculum was introduced into primary schools (pupils aged 5 to 7) from September 1989. Development of pupils' reading skills forms an essential element of the national curriculum programmes of study for English and sets out clear standards for achievement. As from this summer term, the individual achievement of all seven-year-old pupils will, for the first time, be assessed by law.

Since April 1989 the Welsh Office has grant funded the appointment of additional specialist English advisers with the WJEC and in each of the local education authorities to support classroom teachers to introduce the national curriculum requirements for English and also from September 1989, Welsh.

A summary of the latest Her Majesty's inspectorate Wales findings on reading standards is being made available to all directors of education and chairpersons of education committees in Wales. I have asked that high priority be given to the follow-up of all reports of schools with less than satisfactory performance as noted in Her Majesty's inspectorate inspections, the local education authorities own monitoring procedures or the national curriculum assessment arrangements. I have asked Her Majesty's inspectorate to continue to report to me regularly on reading standards.

Her Majesty's inspectorate is organising a conference in July which will be attended by headteachers of primary schools, senior staff, advisers, advisory teachers and teacher trainers. Reading will be featured as part of the conference.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the standard of reading at the age of seven years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest available evidence, based on a comprehensive programme of Her Majesty's inspectorate school inspections over the past 18 months, shows that the teaching of reading in about 83 per cent. of primary schools in Wales is good or satisfactory. I am still very concerned about the 17 per cent. that are not satisfactory. I am therefore, asking local education authorities to give high priority to following up reports on schools with less than satisfactory performance, and I will be receiving regular reports from Her Majesty's inspectorate on reading standards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lithuania

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will convene a meeting of the United Nations Security Council to discuss the use of force by the Soviet armed forces in Lithuania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We do not believe that raising this matter in the UN Security Council at this stage would contribute to a resolution of the present crisis. We can best help by working bilaterally and with our partners and allies to persuade the Soviet authorities to cease the use of force and return to negotiation with the elected authorities of Lithuania and the other Baltic states. We have raised the Baltic states in the current CSCE meetings at Vienna and Valletta, and are considering how best to pursue the matter further within the CSCE framework.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to impose economic sanctions and to withdraw technological aid to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics until the Soviet troops are withdrawn from Lithuania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on 16 January. The EC has decided not to implement its economic assistance to the Soviet Union if the situation which prevails in Lithuania is prolonged in any way or extended to the other Baltic states.

Test Ban Treaty Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom delegation to the partial test ban treaty amendment conference being held at the United Nations in New York from 7 to 18 January; and if he will indicate the status of all civil servants and diplomats participant in the conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom delegation to the PTBTAC consists of the deputy head and one member of the United Kingdom delegation to the conference on disarmament in Geneva and two members of the United Kingdom mission to the United Nations in New York.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on developments to date at the partial test ban treaty amendment conference being held at the United Nations in New York from 7 to 18 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The partial test ban treaty amendment conference has been an opportunity for informed and responsible discussion of the issues surrounding nuclear testing. We hope that a consensus outcome will be possible.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals have been submitted by the United Kingdom delegation to the partial test ban treaty amendment conference being held at the United Nations in New York from 7 to 18 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom delegation has played a full part in the partial test ban treaty amendment conference general debate. No proposals have been submitted by the United Kingdom to the conference.

Advisory Companies

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what public relations, public affairs, advertising and marketing companies are retained to advise him; on what basis they are each appointed; what is the cost, tenure and purpose of their appointment in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office seeks the advice of a wide range of groups on presentational aspects of policy. Most advice given is on an informal and unpaid basis. Austin Knight Advertising UK Ltd., however, is retained by the Overseas Development Administration to advertise vacancies for overseas personnel. Their contract started on 1 June 1988 and expires on 31 March 1991. The contract was awarded following a competitive tendering exercise. The ODA does not pay a fee to Austin Knight but pays only for the advertising space.

EC Audiovisual Support Fund

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will join the European support fund for the co-production and distribution of creative cinematographic and audiovisual works.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

The Government believe that it is for the film industry to decide which European initiatives best serve its interest. We are about to consult industry on the structure of the European co-production fund which was announced by the Government last year. Possible options include using part of this fund for a contribution to EURIMAGES.

PRIME MINISTER

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if he raised with the Saudi Arabian Government during his recent visit the issue of British citizens missing since the tunnel disaster of 2 July 1990.

The Prime Minister: No. The British embassy in Riyadh remain closely in touch with the Saudi authorities who are continuing their investigations to try to trace the three British pilgrims still missing. We have provided finger prints of two of the pilgrims for comparison with those taken of victims before burial.

Departmental Budgets

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister by how much the budget for the Department of Social Security will be decreased and the budget of the Department of the Environment will be increased for 1991-92 in respect of (a) hostels, (b) housing and community charge benefit subsidy and (c) care in the community.

The Prime Minister: For the 1991-92 financial year there will be no transfer of funds between the Department of Social Security and the Department of the Environment in respect of care in the community; but in drawing up the proposed local government financial settlement for England for that year full account was taken of some £16·35 million in respect of hostels. Similarly, the effect of the £86 million reduction in direct subsidy for housing benefit and community charge benefit in 1991-92 was fully taken into account in drawing up the proposed local government financial settlements for that year.

Nuclear Arms

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now reconsider Her Majesty's Government's refusal to commit the United Kingdom to negotiate a complete ban on nuclear tests and to accept annual mini-reviews on the progress of effective reduction of nuclear weapons, as proposed by Mexico and other non-aligned nations at the review conference on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in 1990.

The Prime Minister: We have made clear that we support a comprehensive test ban as a long-term goal to be reached on a step-by-step basis. Because our security will depend for the foreseeable future on deterrence based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons, we have a continuing need to test our nuclear weapons to ensure they remain effective and up-to-date. We believe that the conference on disarmament at Geneva provides the most appropriate forum for discussion of progress on nuclear testing issues.

European Community

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what treaty amendments beyond those in the conclusions of the Rome European Councils are being considered by Her Majesty's Government for submission to the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The Government have already tabled draft treaty amendments on EMU. My right hon.

Friend the Foreign Secretary referred in his speech to the House on 6 December to a number of areas in which the Government would seek improvements in the treaties in the context of the inter-governmental conference on political union. All these are covered by the conclusions of the Rome European Councils.

Iraq

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of the allies towards Iraq should the present regime be militarily defeated in the event of war.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the remarks made by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in the debate on 15 January at column 814. I have nothing further to add.

Public Records Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the findings of the report on the future of the Public Records Office prepared by the civil service efficiency unit published in December 1990.

The Prime Minister: I understand that my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor has received the report of the efficiency scrutiny of the Public Record Office. The report has not yet been published. I understand that the Lord Chancellor intends to make a statement very shortly.

The Gulf

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list in full the military objectives of the allies if war occurs in the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: The Government's objectives since the invasion of Kuwait on 2 August 1990 have been and remain those of the United Nations Security Council resolutions.

Advertising

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister whose responsibility it is to ensure that departmental Ministers observe Government conventions on the use of paid publicity and advertising; what process of scrutiny is currently in operation; and by what process departmental Ministers are held to account for the actions of their Departments in this regard.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 January 1991]: It is the responsibility of individual Ministers to ensure that the conventions on Government publicity and advertising are observed by their Department. Ministers are accountable to Parliament for the actions of their Departments.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security

12. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he plans next to meet Ministers of the Government of the Republic of Ireland to discuss security in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: Security matters will be discussed at the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference. I expect this to take place shortly.

UDR Four

13. Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of his consideration of the case of Winston Allen, Noel Bell, James Hegan and Neill Latimer, known as the UDR Four.

Dr. Mawhinney: Last Thursday the hon. Gentleman presented my right hon. Friend with a dossier regarding these cases. It is being carefully examined.

Empty Council Housing

14. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the most recent figure for empty local authority housing for up to six months, 12 months and over one year, respectively; if he will list the local authorities concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised that at 30 November 1990 they had 1,955 unoccupied dwellings of which 1,176 had been unoccupied for up to six months; 292 had been unoccupied for between six and 12 months and 487 had been unoccupied for more than 12 months. Those figures exclude unoccupied properties which are not available for letting.

Anglo-Irish Conference

15. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the last meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference.

Mr. Brooke: The last meeting of the conference took place on 30 November. Matters discussed included the prospects for political talks, security co-operation and economic and social topics. The joint statement issued after the conference was placed in the Library.

Housing Repossessions

16. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many writs were lodged before the courts for the repossession of houses in the latest year for which figures are available; how many repossessions occurred over that same period, together with comparable figures for 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Exact information is not available but it is believed that approximately 700 orders to repossess either domestic or commercial mortgaged properties were issued in 1990 compared with about 200 in 1982.

It should also be remembered that orders do not always lead to actual repossession, and therefore the total number of repossessions is not known.

Power Station Emissions

17. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent present energy policy in Northern Ireland is intended to enable European Community directives on emissions from power stations to be complied with.

Mr. Hanley: Existing power stations in Northern Ireland will be contributing to the United Kingdom programme, announced on 20 December 1990, for achieving the cuts in emissions required by the Large Combustion Plants Directive. As for future power stations, they will have to comply with separate limits given in the directive.

Sunday Trading

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding Sunday trading.

Mr. Hanley: Apart from the hon. Member raising the matter in the House on 10 May, no representations have been received in recent years regarding Sunday trading in Northern Ireland.

Unemployment

19. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest figure for the level of unemployment in Northern Ireland; and what proposals he has to reduce that level.

Mr. Hanley: At 13 December 1990 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 95,570 unemployed claimants in the Province. The Government's economic development strategy for Northern Ireland aims to improve the competitiveness of the Northern Ireland economy and thereby bring about increased profitability and employment.

Government

20. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in creating institutional and political structures of government in the Province which would command broad public support.

Mr. Brooke: I am continuing to seek agreement among the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland on a basis for talks which would address all key relationships to everyone's satisfaction.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he hopes to announce an appointment in the regional orthopaedic unit at Musgrave Park hospital of a specialist combining treatment of rheumatoid arthritis.

Mr. Hanley: It is the responsibility of the Eastern health and social services board to decide on the requirement for orthopaedic consultants at Musgrave Park hospital and for the Department of Health and Social Services to approve the appointment. No submission for approval to the appointment of a consultant combining treatment of rheumatoid arthritis has yet been received in the Department.

Colin Wallace

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his response to the most recent representations he has had from Colin Wallace.

Dr. Mawhinney: Mr. Wallace's most recent letter to my right hon. Friend was replied to on 16 August 1990.

Film Industry

23. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding there is for the film industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Support for the film industry in Northern Ireland is provided on the same basis as support to industry generally. In addition modest levels of financial assistance are provided by the Arts Council for Northern Ireland and through the business sponsorship incentive scheme administered by the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts (ABSA) on behalf of the Department of Education.

Elderly People

24. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if any extra resources are being made available specifically for the elderly within the budget of the Eastern health and social services board.

Mr. Hanley: Health and social services boards in Northern Ireland will have resources of £830 million available to them in 1991-92, an increase of almost £84 million on the current year. Individual allocations will be announced shortly and it will be for the Eastern board to determine the distribution of resources across the various programmes of care, including the elderly.

Further Education

25. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when decisions will be made regarding further education in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The closing date for responses to the Government's consultative document, "Signposts for the 90s—A Review of Further Education", was 31 December 1990. The views received are being carefully considered and an announcement on the way forward will be made in the early summer.

Security

26. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest security situation.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown).

Tourist Board

27. Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the Northern Ireland tourist board.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Northern Ireland tourist board is being restructured and strengthened to enable it to implement the strategy for tourism introduced in 1989 for achieving sustained growth of tourism to and within Northern Ireland.

Irish Republic

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I expect to discuss political matters, security co-operation and economic and social topics among others at the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference.

Nursery Education

29. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of three and four-year-olds have a full-time nursery place.

Dr. Mawhinney: Eight per cent.

Fallen Animals

6. Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the burial of fallen animals.

Mr. Hanley: I am aware of the problems associated with the disposal of fallen animals and I am very concerned about the particular difficulties arising from the cessation of collection services by the two major rendering plants. I have had useful discussions with one of the rendering plants who are considering providing a disposal service.

I will be meeting next week representatives of district councils in Northern Ireland led by the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) to discuss the general question of disposal of fallen animals.

Government Appointees

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all Government-appointed nominees to the board of Laganside corporation since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The following members have been appointed by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland to serve on the board of Laganside Corporation since its inception on the 14 June 1989:

Member	Period of Appointment	Length of Service

Mr. F. Cobain	1 August 1989 to 13 June 1992	1 August 1989 to date
Mr. D. Moreland, CBE	Since inception on 14 June 1989 to 13 June 1992	14 June 1989 until resignation on 31 March 1990
Mr. G. R. Irwin	1 May 1990 to 13 June 1992	1 May 1990 to date

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all Government-appointed nominees to the Northern Ireland Fire Authority since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The information is as follows:

Name	Year of appoint-ment	Length of service
Mr. F. Proctor	1973	14½ years
Mr. F. McGibbon	1973	4 years
Mr. J. Stewart	1973	16 years

SCOTLAND

Homelessness

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of homeless persons in Scotland aged 16 and 17 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information held centrally does not enable such an estimate to be made. Information based on the number of applications received by local authorities under the homelessness legislation for all age groups was given in a reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Cathcart on 1 November 1990 at columns 714-15.

Community Charge

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of civil penalties imposed in 1989-90 by each community charge registration officer in Scotland in respect of non-return of annual statutory poll tax forms;

(2) if he will list the numbers per thousand liable poll tax payers of civil penalties imposed in 1989-90 by each community charge registration officer in Scotland in respect of non-return of annual statutory inquiry forms.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many amendments were made during 1990 to each poll tax register in each registration area in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Electoral Rolls

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all parliamentary constituencies in Scotland which will have fewer electors registered in the electoral rolls coming into effect in February 1991 than the number of electors registered for 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information will not be available until the registers are completed in February. I shall write to the hon. Member in due course and place a copy of the information in the Library.

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the capital sums spent by each local authority in Scotland on (a) improving access to public buildings by people in wheelchairs, (b) improving access to public roads and footpaths by lowering kerb heights and (c) improving access to specially adapted public toilets for use by people in wheelchairs for the most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not available centrally.

Housing

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce his approval of a grant by Scottish Homes for the LINK housing scheme at Melrose.

Mr. Lang: I have not yet received any application from Scottish Homes to approve payment of grant in respect of the proposed project by LINK housing.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has required an environmental impact assessment of the proposed forestry plantation at Glen Dye, Grampian region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The woodland grant scheme application for Glen Dye was submitted to the Forestry Commission before the Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 came into force.

Population Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage change in the population of Scotland during (a) the 1970s and (b) the 1980s.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The published estimates show that the population of Scotland fell by 0·1 per cent. between 30 June 1969 and 30 June 1979, and by 2·2 per cent. between 30 June 1979 and 30 June 1989, the most recent date for which information is available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will express the Scottish unemployment rate as a percentage of the United Kingdom unemployment rate for each year since 1979.

Mr. Allan Stewart: A comparison of Scottish and United Kingdom seasonally adjusted annual average unemployment rates in the period since 1979 is set out in the table. The latest position (December 1990) is such that Scotland's unemployment rate is closer to the United Kingdom average in absolute terms (1·5 percentage points) than it was at any time since January 1979.

Private Landlords (Grants)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and value of housing authority grants made to private landlords under sections 24 to 26 of the Local Government Act 1988 for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will provide a breakdown of the total cost of such grants to individual local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1989-90, Scottish local authorities applied for and received consent from my right hon. and learned Friend to make section 24 grants on four occasions, in each case to housing associations. The authorities concerned and the amounts were:

Local authority	Amount £
Shetland Islands council	24,000
Lochaber district council	7,000
North-East Fife district council	43,000
Perth and Kinross district council	25,000

No consents were applied for in 1988-89.

Pollution Control

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether grant aid is available under the farm and conservation grant scheme to cover the costs incurred as a result of reinforcement of the electricity supply due to the installation of new pollution control equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision or upgrading of electricity supply as such is not eligible for grant under the farm and conservation grant scheme, as the hon. Member will know from the reply to a similar question put by him to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 3 December.

There was, however, one exceptional instance some 12 months ago when the Scottish Office allowed grant on the installation of a discrete three-phase electricity supply to power farm waste handling equipment. In that case the provision of a new supply was cheaper and more efficient than the conversion of individual pumps (which are themselves eligible for grant), to run on the existing supply.

Glasgow City Technology Academy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent from public funds on the proposed city technology academy in Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1991]: Information on the total expenditure incurred is not available and depends in part on negotiations between the GTA and its professional advisers.

HEALTH

The Gulf

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds have been earmarked for personnel suffering injuries in a possible war in the Gulf in the area health authorities for (a) Sunderland, (b) Durham and (c) Hartlepool; and what assessment has been made on the consequential effects upon local waiting lists.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Wythenshawe and Withington hospitals, the Manchester Royal infirmary and Stockport infirmary are included in contingency plans for the treatment of air-lifted casualties to the United Kingdom in the event of international conflict in the Gulf; what effect this emergency use of hospitals will have on local patients; if extra resources are being or will be made available to the hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the current number of closed beds in national health service hospitals in the Greater London area; and how many are now available for casualties arising from a war with Iraq;

(2) if he will identify the national health service hospitals, number of wards and number of beds in Greater London earmarked for possible casualties in the event of a war with Iraq;

(3) how many beds currently closed in Newham health district have been earmarked for use by casualties in the event of war with Iraq; and who will pay for such beds being brought back into use in such circumstances.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has, by region, to ensure that the contingency plans for the national health service dealing with casualties of the Gulf crisis in the event of war have no adverse effect on existing waiting lists.

Mr. Dorrell: The reception of Gulf casualties will inevitably increase the emergency workload of the National Health Service. We are confident that the health authorities can deal adequately with the increased emergency workload, though some non-emergency admissions may need to be deferred. We do not expect this to be a long term affect and we hope to restore normal level of service as soon as possible.

Health authorities' plans for dealing with casualties from hostilities in the Gulf involve hospitals throughout the NHS. It is for health authorities to allocate cases to particular hospitals and information on which hospitals are being used is not available centrally.

As my right hon. Friend announced yesterday, we will provide extra money to meet the full costs of any Gulf casualties. We have told health authorities that they should spend what is necessary and we are giving guidance on how to account for and reclaim Gulf costs. This means that health authorities will be able to continue to use all the money in their normal allocations for their normal workload.

The Department does not routinely collect information on bed closures, as this is not a good indicator of levels of service in the NHS.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra resources will be made available to health authorities dealing with casualties of the Gulf crisis in the event of war.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources he is making available to the national health service in the event of war with Iraq.

Mr. Waldegrave: Health authorities will be given extra money to cover the full cost of treating any casualties from war in the Gulf. We are sending health authorities guidance on how to account for this.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give, by region, the number of national health service beds to be made available in proposals to deal with casualties of the Gulf crisis in the event of war.

Mr. Dorrell: We would make available such beds as are needed. Our plans envisage that all 14 regions, and at regional discretion a number of hospitals within each region, should share in the treatment of casualties.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has received on the likely number of casualties to be handled by the national health service arising from a war with Iraq.

Mr. Dorrell: Casualty estimates are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private hospitals have (a) offered assistance and (b) been earmarked to receive casualties in the event of war with Iraq.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities will take whatever action they think appropriate, including using private hospitals, to ensure that any Gulf casualties can be treated quickly and effectively.

Dental Practitioners

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the impact on the public of the new contract for general dental practitioners.

Mr. Waldegrave: The new contract for general dental practitioners means better all-round care for patients, including preventive treatment, under national health service arrangements. Patients now also receive more information about their dental care and the choices open to them. Forty-one per cent. of the population are exempt from dental changes. At present, those patients who are not exempt are charged a fixed proportion (75 per cent.) of the fee paid to the dentist for the treatment given. I have no plans to increase the proportional charge in the foreseeable future.

Food Safety

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the terms of reference of the advisory committee and steering group on the microbiological safety of food.

Mr. Dorrell: The terms of reference of the advisory committee are:

"To assess the risk to humans of micro-organisms which are used or occur in or on food and to advise Ministers on the exercise of powers in the Food Safety Act 1990 relating to the microbiological safety of food."

The terms of reference of the steering group are:

"To identify through surveillance the need for action to ensure the microbiological safety of food."

General Practitioners (Additional Payments)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to using enumeration districts instead of wards when calculating the Jarman 8 index of deprivation to calculate additional payments to general practitioners in areas of deprivation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Using enumeration districts instead of wards as the basis for calculating these payments has been suggested to us by general practitioners and others, but it would raise practical problems, for example of sample size, that would require careful consideration. Such a change would be made only if we could be satisfied that it would achieve better targeting of resources.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the use of the Jarman 8 index of deprivation when calculating additional payments to general practitioners in areas of deprivation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of letters on the use of the Jarman index from general practitioners, hon. Members and various interested groups. Although the representations welcome the introduction of deprivation payments they make a number of comments and criticisms which we are studying carefully.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his current estimate of people in the London borough of Newham waiting for hospital treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is provided in the following table:

	March 1989	March 1990	Decrease
			Number	Per cent.
Total number of list	1,122	871	251	−22
Number waiting over one year	345	136	209	−60

Coronary Heart Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the health districts in England and Wales with standardised death rates from coronary heart disease more than 30 per cent. higher than the national average for women;

(2) if he will list the health districts in England and Wales with standardised death rates from coronary heart disease more than 25 per cent. higher than the national average for men.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figures are as follows:

Surgery Buildings

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, under the cost rent scheme, value added tax on the cost of a site, required under the new EEC regulation to be paid on the cost of the site on completion of a surgery building, even when value added tax was not payable when the site was actually purchased before the operation of the EEC regulation, will be calculated as included in the total cost to be covered by the scheme, as if the new regulation had been in force when the land was actually purchased before commencement of the building.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. We plan to amend the statement of fees and allowances payable to general medical practitioners to allow any VAT liability on site costs to be fully taken into account in assessing the total cost to be covered by the cost rent scheme.

HIV (Diets)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what communications his Department has received from Anita McDonald concerning the interpretation of her research relating to the cost of diets for people with AIDS or HIV infection; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no such communications.

Deprivation Index

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the impact of altering the banding arrangements to include wards with Jarman scores of 10 or over.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of wards (1981 boundaries) which have a Jarman score of 10 or more in England is 1,954. If deprivation payments were to be made at the level (10 or more) the cost would have to be met by reducing other fees and allowances within the remuneration system to ensure that the average net income incurred by general practitioners did not exceed the level recommended by the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body and accepted by the Government. If the payment rate for the band 30-39 was extended down to 10, some £60 million at January 1991 rates would have to be found by reducing other fees and allowance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Crisis Loans

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been awarded crisis loans due to a period of compulsory unpaid holidays under paragraph 4161 of the social fund manual (a) in 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90 by (i) amount paid and (ii) length of time awarded.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what level the limit above which occupational pension is deducted from unemployment benefit would have to be raised in order to restore its April 1981 value as a proportion of average earnings; and whether he will increase it accordingly.

Mr. Jack: Against a background in which occupational pensions have been rising, we have no plans to increase the limit; but had it been raised in line with earnings increases since 1981, it would now be £76 at an annual cost of £14 million.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the percentage fall over the period since the end of April 1987 in the real value of the incomes of persons then receiving supplementary benefit and now receiving income support with transitional protection, assuming that they have no disregarded income.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 20 November at column 108.

Disabled People (Extra Costs)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the table in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys reports which supports the statements of Ministers in Standing Committee E that the average extra costs of people who are not independently mobile are less than half of the average extra costs of those who are unable or virtually unable to walk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is not contained in the tables published in the OPCS reports but is derived from a detailed analysis of the survey data. That analysis indicates that those people already in receipt of mobility allowance had extra costs, on average, of some £13 per week; the group of people who are not independently mobile, whom we expect to receive the new lower rate mobility component, had extra costs, on average, of £6 per week.

Family Credit

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families employed in farming have been receiving family credit for each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Separate information about people employed in farming is not available. The total number of people in "farming, fisheries and related occupations", which would include all categories of farming, is as follows:

At 30 April	Number
1989	10,320
1990	11,240

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether employees who pay national insurance are eligible for unemployment benefit during compulsory unpaid holidays.

Mr. Jack: Under regulation 7 (1)(h) of the Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit Regulations 1983, unemployment benefit cannot be paid while an employee is on a holiday which is recognised or customary in his employment. The only exceptions are

1. where the employee has been laid off work for an indefinite period which started more than a week before the holiday, or
2. where the employee has used up his whole year's holiday entitlement between the previous 1 March and the date of the holiday.

It is for the independent adjudicating authorities to decide whether a particular holiday is recognised or customary.

Children (Benefits)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the percentage increase will be in April in the combined value of child dependency increase and child benefit payable to a widow or invalidity pensioner for the first child and each subsequent child in the family.

Mr. Jack: The total amount payable to a widow or invalidity pensioner by way of child benefit and child dependency increase will be increased by 6·2 per cent. from £16·90 to £17·95 per child from April.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the combined value of child dependency increase and child benefit for the child of a widow or invalidity pensioner at current and April 1991 prices and as a percentage of average earnings, in November 1979 and at each subsequent uprating date; and what was the reason for any fall in real value since November 1979.

Mr. Jack: The values of child dependency increase and child benefit for the child of a widow or invalidity pensioner at current and April 1990 prices (the latest April figure available) and as percentage of average earnings are shown in the table.

Abbreviations:
UR = Uprating.
CHB = Child benefit.
CDI = Child dependency increase.
ARV = Average real value.
RV = Real value.
AGWE = Average gross weekly earnings.

Notes:
Column 1: Uprating dates refer to the child dependency increases. For all but the first date they are also the uprating dates for child benefit.
Column 2: The rate of child benefit plus child dependency increase is the same for a widow or an invalidity pensioner.
Column 3: The average real value (using the general index of retail prices) of the amounts in column 2 over the period between the urprating dates in column 1.
Column 4: The real value at April 1990 prices (using the general index of retail prices) of the amounts in column 2 at date of uprating in column 1.
Column 5: The value of the amount in column 2 as a percentage of average gross weekly earnings. The source of the earnings is the new earnings survey and the estimates used up to November 1982 are those for adults aged over 21 in full-time employment whose earnings are unaffected by absence. From November 1983 the source remains the new earnings survey but in respect of all full-time workers on adult rates of pay whose earnings are unaffected by absence.

The differential between the present combined weekly rate of child benefit and child dependency increase and that payable in 1979 expressed in terms of April 1990 prices has been caused by the method by which child dependency increases are uprated. Both the child benefit legislation and that governing the uprating of benefits provide for the rate of child benefit to be taken into account when determining the levels of child dependency increases of benefits. The method of doing this is to calculate what the child dependency increase would be if the general uprating percentage were applied, and then to deduct any cash increase in child benefit.

Child Poverty

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie), of 20 December 1990, Official Report, column 318, if he will publish in the Official Report his response to the National Children's Bureau concerning its report into child poverty conducted by Professor Jonathan Bradshaw for publication by UNICEF.

Mr. Jack: The response of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is as follows:

Thank you for your letter of 7 December enclosing a copy of the report on "Child Poverty and Deprivation in the UK". The Prime Minister has also asked me to thank you for your letter to him dated 11 December. I would like to comment on some aspects of the report which fall within the remit of my Department.

I read the report with considerable interest, and can assure you that the Government fully agrees with the conclusion that "a key determinant of children's lives is the state of the economy." That is why we have pursued policies aimed at creating a competitive and thriving economy—because we believe that is the best way of helping all the people of this country.

I was also pleased to see that the author recognises the danger of attempting to define a "poverty line", with poor people on one side and people who are not poor on the other. As you know, we have often drawn attention to the fact that no Government in this country—irrespective of political persuasion—has ever accepted that a single "poverty line" can be drawn.

As the author of your report demonstrates, a line fixed at, or around, the benefit level has the paradoxical effect of increasing the number of "poor" people whenever the benefits are increased. I was therefore rather surprised to see him dismiss one "poverty line" on grounds of "intuition" in favour of another equally arbitrary one at 110 per cent. of the supplementary benefit level.

I think the report is rather disingenuous in stating that "only" 45 per cent. of the increase in numbers with incomes below this level are accounted for by real increases in benefit levels. Looked at another way, the report is confirming precisely what we have always argued—that a very substantial proportion (nearly half) of the increase in numbers is attributable to real increases.

I would not dispute that unemployment also played a part in increasing the numbers receiving benefit—but unemployment has virtually halved since the period in question; and the Government has responded to another factor which has also undoubtedly come into play—namely, the growth in lone parenthood, to which we have responded by developing a comprehensive strategy including proposals for enforcement and collection of child maintenance, benefit improvements for lone parents, and better work incentives.

I was also disappointed to notice that the report, in commenting on the growth in numbers of children living in households with incomes below the average, or below half average, has ignored the very significant growth in average income itself. Any statement about the numbers living on incomes below a proportion of the average is simply incomplete without any reference to the overall growth in the average—which rose by some 23 per cent. between 1979 and 1987. Indeed, a careful examination of tables B3 of Households Below Average Income will demonstrate that between 1979 and 1987 the proportion of children below half average income (1979 level expressed in real terms) actually fell.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Anti-dumping Measures

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many items or products are subject to EC anti-dumping duties, import quotas, secret or otherwise, or price maintenance agreements, including those concluded as a result of anti-dumping investigations; and if he will list the products and items concerned, together with an estimate of the effect on the price of these products.

Mr. Sainsbury: At 31 December 1990 definitive anti-dumping remedies were in force on a total of 56 products imported into the European Community from certain exporting countries. A further 5 products are currently subject to provisional anti-dumping duties imposed by the Commission pending a definitive decision by the Council of Ministers. I have placed in the Library of the House a list of all remedies in force on 31 December. This shows not only duties but undertakings given by exporters to observe minimum price levels.

All products requiring an individual licence for import into the United Kingdom are listed in the open general import licence of 4 December 1987, as amended, which is published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The great majority of products subject to quantitative restrictions are textile and clothing products covered by the Multi-Fibre Arrangement. In addition the United Kingdom maintains quotas on bananas from the dollar area and on a variety of products from the remaining state trading countries. I have placed in the Library of the House notice to importers No. 2291 of 3 January which sets out the 1991 quota levels for restricted textiles and Notice to Importers No. 2293 of the same date which gives the provisional 1991 arrangements for the state trading area.

In addition a number of products are subject under Community regulations to surveillance licensing. This does not amount to a quantitative restriction but can allow voluntary restraint arrangements negotiated or accepted by the Commission to be monitored. Such arrangements cover certain textile and clothing products imported from Egypt, Malta, Morocco, Tunisia and Turkey, most types of footwear from Korea and Taiwan and certain iron and steel products from (in 1990) Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania and Brazil. (This in addition to the United Kingdom quota on iron and steel products from the USSR). Iron and steel products from all sources are subject to surveillance licensing so that a check can be made on the prices at which the products are traded.

There are no official restrictions on the import of motor vehicles but an inter-industry voluntary restraint arrangement limits the share of the United Kingdom market taken by exports from Japan.

Anti-dumping remedies are designed to raise the price of dumped products by an amount which reflects either the dumping margin or the margin of injury suffered by EC industry whichever is the lower. The rates of anti-dumping duty applied to each product at the point of import are contained in the list I have placed in the Library. Whether the full effect is felt at retail level will depend on the extent to which margins are adjusted after the point of import.

The exact effect of quota restrictions is very difficult to estimate but those set at levels that effectively restrict trade can be expected to raise prices to the consumer. A number of academic studies have attempted to estimate the price effects in the main sectors. Professor Silberston of Imperial College for instance estimated in 1989 that the ending of the multi-fibre arrangement would lead to a fall of 8 per cent. in average import prices of clothing. In a 1988 study of the cars VRA Professor Alistair Smith of Sussex university estimated that it raised the price of Japanese cars in the United Kingdom by 7·5 per cent. There are no studies covering the whole of the United Kingdom's current restrictions. Estimates are particularly difficult to make where the situation can change from year to year or even more rapidly and earlier studies relating to eastern Europe are now out of date.

Ford Vehicles (Export)

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has been notified of any significant increase in motor vehicle exports from the Dagenham plant of the Ford Motor Company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I was personally notified by the chairman and chief executive of Ford at the start of the export programme from Dagenham. I have written congratulating both management and work force at Dagenham on their behalf.

Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to investigate the allegations of price rigging and fixing of odds on racecourses and greyhound tracks.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 14 January 1991 at col. 353.

Recycling

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer on 26 November, Official Report, columns 276-77, on the importance his Department places on providing outlets for recycled materials in order to achieve the Government's recycling targets, what is his Department's advice to those companies developing markets for refined refuse derived fuels; how they will be helped by current derogation arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's advice to all manufacturers of refuse-derived fuel (rdf) would be to work closely with potential users to ensure that the product meets their requirements on, amongst other things, calorific value and burn and emission characteristics. I understand that those companies engaged in developing rdf are already doing this to a large extent, but my department has available two schemes of financial assistance (ETIS, the environmental technology innovation scheme—and DEMOS, DTI's environmental management options scheme) which may be used to aid that process.

The matter of derogation arrangements is one for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

DAF/Leyland

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the numbers of jobs shed by DAF/Leyland in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Holland.

Mr. Leigh: Leyland DAF's total employment in the United Kingdom fell from 6,997 at the end of 1989 to 6,471 at the end of 1990. Of this 526 net reduction, 120 jobs were not lost but transferred out of Leyland DAF with the sale of part of the company's business to VDL group. I have no information on the company's employment figures in the Netherlands.

Exports to Brazil

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will extend Export Credits Guarantee Department cover to British machine manufacturers exporting to Brazil;

(2) if he will take steps to enable British knitting machine manufacturers to offer extended credit terms of up to five years, with low rates of interest on supplies of such machines to Brazil.

Mr. Sainsbury: ECGD cover for export contracts in Brazil on credit terms of up to five years is currently suspended. Brazil is in arrears on debts which have already been rescheduled. These arrears must be settled and an IMF economic programme implemented before ECGD can consider restoring extended credit arrangements.

If and when ECGD is able to resume medium cover, finance will be made available by United Kingdom banks at interest rates permitted under the OECD consensus arrangements.

Terrorism (Insurance)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to issue guidelines to insurance companies about damage resulting from Iraqi terrorist acts in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The Association of British Insurers has issued a statement on this matter. Their guidelines deal with the impact of possible Iraqi terrorist action on existing policies. I am arranging for a copy of the ABI's statement to be placed in the Library.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Land Sales

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what process of consultation with land users is followed when church land is sold for development.

Mr. Alison: The consultation procedure depends on the category of Church land to be sold. In the case of glebe land, the relevant diocesan board of finance is the owner and, under the Endowments and Glebe Measure 1976, they are legally required to notify the incumbent (or, if the living is vacant, the churchwardens) who may make representations to the Commissioners. It would also be usual for the board to consult tenants, though they are not required by the measure to do so.

The local planning authority will follow its own consultation procedures in relation to any application for planning permission.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how much land has been sold by the Lincoln Diocese Board in each of the latest three available years; and how much was raised by the sales.

Mr. Alison: Details of glebe sales in Lincoln diocese for 1988-90 are:

	Acres	Proceeds (£)
1988	429	794,874
1989	558	1,349,604
1990	433	1,641,834

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how much land has been sold by the Church Commissioners in each of the three latest available years; how much was raised in each of the three years by sales; and how much was reinvested in land.

Mr. Alison: Sales and purchases of agricultural land for 1987-89 are shown in the following table. They reflect the Commissioners' stated policy of releasing capital for reinvestment in other sectors, through sales of vacant farms as opportunities arise.

	Acres sold	Net sale proceeds £ million	Acres purchased	Net cost of purchases £
1987	835	4·2	Nil	Nil
1988	3,121	11·9	65	147,000
1989	4,791	16·1	14	9,000

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what representations the Church Commissioners have received from residents and allotment holders about the sale of church land on the Boulthness Glebe in Lincoln; and what action they propose to take to meet representatives of the allotment holders and local councillors to discuss the sale.

Mr. Alison: I believe that the property that the hon. Member has in mind is at Boultham. The Commissioners have not received any representations about the sale of church land there and have no plans to meet allotment holders or local councillors.

I understand, however, that the Lincoln diocesan board of finance has submitted a planning application for residential development of part of the glebe land and the creation of a wildlife habitat on the remainder. The board will forward any consequent sale proposals to the Commissioners, whose consent is required under the Endowments and Glebe Measure 1976.

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Footballers (Illegal Payments)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when he expects to meet representatives of the Football League in order to discuss the need to ensure consistency of treatment of clubs who make illegal payments to their players; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has concerning the policy of the Football League towards the determination of penalties relating to illegal payments to players; what representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I condemn attempts by any club to gain unfair advantage over others. However, the question of the appropriate action to take when breaches of Football League regulations occur is for the football authorities which I understand consider all such cases on their merits. I have no plans to meet the League to discuss this matter.

Last year my hon. Friend the previous Minister for Sport received a substantial number of representations, mainly from Swindon Town FC supporters, concerning the penalty imposed by the League on the club for making illegal payments to players.

Higher Education

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of young people in the northern region entered higher education year by year since 1985.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The table shows, for school leavers in the north of England and for England as a whole, the percentage whose intended destination was either degree or teacher training courses.

Percentage of leavers going to degree or teacher training courses

Academic year	North of England	All England
1984-85	7·2	7·8
1985-86	7·1	7·8
1986-87	7·2	7·7
1987-88	7·9	9·1
1988-89	9·5	10·2

Primary School Teachers

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what initiatives he is taking to reduce the shortage of teachers in primary schools in Leicestershire.

Mr. Fallon: Leicestershire local education authority is to receive grant support for £150,000 of expenditure on teacher recruitment in 1991-92. This is part of an overall allocation of £7·7 million between 86 LEAs, the average grant support being £90,000. A similar sum will be available in 1992-93. In addition, Leicestershire LEA will benefit from £80,000 allocated to support a licensed teacher scheme. This funding reflects the Department's commitment to assist authorities in the development of initiatives to improve teacher recruitment.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Eggar: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Dyslexic Pupils

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what special arrangements he has now made for the marking of GCSE exam papers where the pupil has dyslexia; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The GCSE examining group have a well-established common policy, drawn up in consultation with various national organisations, to deal with handicapped candidates, including those who are recognised as dyslexic. There are also appeals procedures available for those candidates who feel that such special circumstances have not been taken into account in the marking of their examinations. No changes to this provision have been proposed.

Expenditure

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, following the statement by his predecessor, the hon. Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) how much extra capital moneys have been allocated for educational purposes in 1990-91; and what proportion of these have been allocated to (a) England and (b) Wales.

Mr. Fallon: With the exception of universities, the Department's expenditure programme does not cover education capital expenditure in Wales.

Provision in the DES programme for capital expenditure on schools, colleges and PCFC institutions in England in 1990-91 was some £109 million higher than in 1989-90. Details are set out in the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1011).

Examination Results

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in England in rank order showing the proportions of school-leavers with five or more GCSE results at grades A to C.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in England in rank order showing the proportions of school leavers with five or more GCSE results at grades A to C.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is set out in the table.

[1] The examination data are aggregated from the results of a sample survey for the academic years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89. These figures are based on a 10 per cent. sample of school leavers in maintained schools (excluding special schools). The percentages do not reflect exam achievements of pupils after leaving school. It includes GCSE and O-level grades A to C and CSE grade 1.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities in England which achieved average or better examination results for school leavers on the basis of the latest information available and are budgeting to spend no more than 5 per cent. above the education component of their 1990-91 standard spending assessment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

House of Commons Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, why the cleaners in the House of Commons itself and other associated buildings were requested to work on Monday 24 December.

Mr. Beith: For a number of staff of the House, Christmas eve was a normal non-sitting working day, although only a proportion of the House's directly employed cleaning staff was required for work that day.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing his estimates of how much will be saved in community charge benefit subsidy in 1990-91 for each local authority which is a housing benefit authority as a result of charge-capping.

Miss Widdecombe: All authorities have until 30 September 1991 to submit claims to community charge benefit subsidy in respect of 1990-91. These claims will reflect community charge benefit expenditure incurred after the application of budget substitution, but it will not be possible reliably to estimate what the level of that expenditure would otherwise have been.

Income Support

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the deductions that may be made from income support benefit before a claimant receives it.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 26 November at cols. 306-08.

Pensioners' Christmas Bonus

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate his Department has made of the potential cost of a 1991 Christmas bonus for pensioners at (a) £10·00 per pensioner, (b) £15·00 per pensioner and (c) £20·00 per pensioner.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated cost of paying the pensioners' Christmas bonus in 1991-92 is approximately £114 million. If the payment was increased to £15 per pensioner, the cost would be about £171 million; if the payment was increased to £20 per pensioner, the cost would be £228 million.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Miss Widdecombe: No savings would be made and costs could increase because officials would have to brief Ministers on the whole range of subjects which could possibly arise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Miss Widdecombe: The time taken to prepare ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in this Department, although estimates would be made if the disproportionate cost threshold, currently £250, were likely to be exceeded for an individual question. However, the current estimate of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question if £99, on the basis set out in the reply of my right hon. Friend the Lord President to the hon. Member on 19 December 1990 at column 163.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide illustrative examples of people who would be (a) better off and (b) worse off claiming the disability working allowance compared with their current situation.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 16 January 1991]: Some illustrative examples of the level of income that disability working allowance (DWA) recipients will have were included in the note published on 12 November, a copy of which is in the Library. All recipients who claim more than eight weeks after starting work will be better off than if they did not have DWA. Most other potential recipients earning more than about £30 a week will be better off with DWA than they would be if they remained on an incapacity benefit.

A small number of people in the circumstances listed might be worse off if they decided to take a job at a very low rate of pay. However, no one will be obliged to claim DWA and, if they choose to take a job and claim DWA, all of them will be better off than if DWA were not available to supplement their earnings.

The level of earnings below which people in the categories listed would be worse off would depend on the incapacity benefit to which they would be entitled if they were not working, the size and composition of their family and, in the case of (a), on the size of the claimant's mortgage.

The circumstances in which a small number of people might be worse off if they decided to take a job at a very low rate of pay supported by DWA include the following:

a. if the claimant has a mortgage (but we expect about 10,000 DWA recipients will have mortgages and will be better off on DWA);

b. exceptionally, if the claimant has children and his income, including earnings and DWA, would be very little above income support level, loss of free school meals might take them below income support level;

c. if the claimant is receiving invalidity benefit and has entitlement to a large amount of additional pension, or if he has a significant amount of capital or another source of income;

d. if the claimant is on invalidity benefit and has a partner who is working (but we expect that some DWA recipients will have partners who are working and will be better off);

e. if the IVB recipient is doing therapeutic work permitted by regulations.

THE ARTS

Liverpool Playhouse

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the funding and future of the Liverpool Playhouse.

Mr. Renton: The funding of the Liverpool Playhouse is a matter for the Arts Council, and for the Merseyside local authorities and other local interests. However, I met hon. Members from Merseyside on 16 January to discuss the financial position of the company. I am well aware of the affection and loyalty that is felt for this famous theatre, and of the widespread concern for its future. The Arts Council has long shared that concern, and it is continuing to discuss funding arrangements with the Merseyside local authorities with a view to the local authorities aiming nearer to the level of financial contribution made by the Arts Council. I hope that there will be a successful outcome.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Manpower

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the manpower figures for each part of nationalised industry in 1978-79 and 1988-89, showing the reduction or increase in each case and also the decrease in each sector due to denationalisation.

Mr. Mellor: Outturn data for the nationalised industries for 1978-79 and 1988-89 were published in appendix D of chapter 21 of the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 1021). Over that period manpower fell by 1,062,000 from 1,843,000 to 781,000, a reduction of 57·6 per cent. Nationalised industries that were privatised between 1978-79 and 1988-89 employed about 650,000 people at the time of privatisation. Information on manpower figures for each nationalised industry for the years 1978-79 and 1988-89 can be found in the annual report and accounts of each industry for these years.

Alcohol and Tobacco Duty

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it remains Government policy that harmonisation of alcohol and tobacco duties must involve either effective restrictions or high minimum duty rates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's view on harmonisation remains that centrally determined duty rates are not necessary for completion of the single market, but that alcohol and tobacco need to be treated as special cases under an approach based on the free operation of market forces.

Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what conclusions he has come on the future structure of the beer duty following the recent consultation exercise with the trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Trade responses to the Customs and Excise consultative paper have not revealed any major obstacles to the introduction of an end-product duty on beer. I have therefore decided to replace in due course the present worts-based duty by a duty on the finished beer, subject to satisfactory arrangements being devised following further consultation with trade interests. I have asked Customs and Excise to begin discussions on the details of a new system.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) Her Majesty's Treasury's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and would therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which sectors of the British economy were in balance of payments surplus in 1979 and for the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 January 1991]: Industrial sector data of imports and exports on a balance of payments basis are normally available only for years in which input-output tables are compiled. Input-output tables exist for 1979 and 1984, and a simple update of 1984 to 1985 was carried out. For these years, the energy and services industrial sectors were in balance of payments surplus. The table gives the relevant data for these and the other main sectors of the economy.

Exports less imports of goods and services by industrial sector, on a balance of payments basis

£ billion

	1979	1984	1985
Agriculture	−1·8	−1·2	−2·3
Energy	−1·5	+5·9	+6·9
Manufacturing	−3·7	−15·3	−14·3
Services etc.	+7·4	+10·6	+13·3
Overall balance	+0·5	−0·9	+3·6

Notes on the table:

The industrial sectors are defined in terms of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification as follows:

Agriculture: Division 0.
Energy: Division 1.
Manufacturing: Divisions 2-4.
Services etc.: Divisions 5-9.

The table is restricted to trade in goods and services, and does not include flows of interest, profits and dividends, and transfers. These items are included in the overall measure of the balance of payments for the United Kingdom.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government Appointees

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of all Government-appointed nominees to the Northern Ireland Sports Council since its formation, giving the year of appointment and the length of service in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 January 1991]: The information requested is set out in the table with names in alphabetical order. Length of service of members still serving is taken as up to January 1991.

Official Histories

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many official histories have been commissioned by the Government since 1960; what are their titles; when each was commenced; when each was completed; who were the authors; and what was the cost of each;

(2) how many Government-sponsored official histories are currently in preparation; when they were commissioned; who are the authors; what are the estimated dates of completion; and what is the estimated cost of each.

The Prime Minister: The original programme of official histories commissioned by the War Cabinet covered the military and civil history of the second world war.

Subsequently two further groups of wartime histories were commissioned, tables A and B;

On 9 March 1966 the then Prime Minister announced that the official programme would be extended to include selected periods or episodes of peacetime history. The following were commissioned, table C.

[2] main preparation and all publication costs met by commercial publishers.

The cost of preparing official histories is borne on the votes of several Government Departments, mainly the Cabinet Office; the cost of printing, publishing and distribution falls to HMSO. (Revenue from sales goes towards offsetting these costs). It is not possible without disproportionate cost to itemise the cost of individual histories.

Ministers (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list in ranked order and by name the numbers of overseas trips undertaken by Ministers since June 1987.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally and could not be produced without incurring disproportionate costs.

Sanctions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria have been adopted to judge the success of the application of sanctions upon Iraq imposed under the authorisation of the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: The test of the effectiveness of sanctions is whether they persuade Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait. After nearly six months this has not been achieved.

Security

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance is issued to Ministers on answering questions from right hon. and hon. Members on matters affecting security during periods of armed conflict.

The Prime Minister: Normal procedures for answering questions on matters affecting security continue to apply.

Mr. Ian Richter

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has made on behalf of Ian Richter, a British citizen presently held in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We remain concerned about the position of Mr. Ian Richter. We have regularly raised his case with the Iraqi authorities and our ambassador did so again shortly before he left Baghdad earlier this month. We have made arrangements to ensure that Mr. Richter continues to receive visits and comforts. We are in close touch with his family here.

WALES

Tourism

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve the overseas marketing of tourism within Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The overseas promotion of Wales as a tourist destination is a statutory responsibility of the British Tourist Authority, although the Wales tourist board can, with the agreement of the BTA, act on its behalf.

Following a meeting I had with the chairman of the WTB last June, the board commissioned a study intended to identify ways of improving the effectiveness of the overseas marketing of Wales, within the existing legal framework.

I understand that the report is expected very shortly. I assure my hon. Friend that Ministers will consider its findings very carefully.

Reading Standards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call an all-Wales conference of Her Majesty's inspectors, local education authority parent-teacher associations and teachers to discuss the reading standards of seven-year-olds in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 17 January 1991, column 569-70.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all sites where a total quantity of 25 tonnes or more of dangerous substances are present, quoting the ordnance survey eight-figure grid reference number for each site.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available in the format requested. Each Health and Safety Executive area office keeps available for public inspection lists of premises in its area, by name and address, where dangerous substances are present and where notification required under certain legislation has been received by the Health and Safety Executive.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eggs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number and value of eggs (a) imported into the United Kingdom and (b) exported from the United Kingdom, between (i) September 1988 and August 1989 and (ii) September 1989 and August 1990.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of eggs Thousands	Value £
(a) Eggs imported into the United Kingdom
(i) 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1989	276,432	9,339,648
(ii) 1 September 1989 to 31 August 1990	684,988	29,039,383
(b) Eggs exported from the United Kingdom
(i) 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1989	395,018	13,583,133
(ii) 1 September 1989 to 31 Auguest 1990	100,371	4,549,383

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North dated 20 December 1990, Official Report, column 296, on CAP expenditure, if he will state the total net cost to the Exchequer of support for agriculture and the common agricultural policy, after deducting any relevant refunds and grants received; and if he will also show the amount per head of the population of the United Kingdom which this net figure represents.

Mr. Curry: The total figures, and the equivalent per head of United Kingdom population, which my hon. Friend has requested, are as follows:

Estimate for 1990-91	Total (£ million)	£/head
Exchequer expenditure on the common agricultural policy in the United Kingdom	1,900	33
Receipts from the European Community in the relation to agriculture	1,600	28
Total Exchequer expenditure on agricultural grants and subsidies in the United Kingdom (EC and national)	1,950	34
Cost to the Exchequer of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the total Community budget (all EC expenditure including agriculture)	2,100	37

It would be misleading to net off EC receipts in relation to agriculture from Exchequer expenditure on the CAP, because the United Kingdom is a net contributor to the EC budget. It is not possible, for the reasons given in the previous reply, to estimate the cost of the United Kingdom's contribution to agricultural expenditure elsewhere in the Community.

Expenditure on Food

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk North dated 13 November 1990, Official Report, column 118, if he will now include with the information already given the expenditure on food at 1989 prices for 1960, 1970, 1980 and 1989.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is given in the table.

Consumers' expenditure on household food in the United Kingdom

	Household expenditure on food at current prices £ million	Expenditure on food as a percentage of total consumers expenditure per cent.	[1] Household expenditure on food in real terms £ million
1960	4,228	25·0	38,789
1970	6,369	20·0	39,559
1980	23,655	16·9	40,785
1989	39,181	11·9	39,181

Sheep and Cow Subsidies

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the sheep subsidy and hill cow payments will be made; what delays there have been in payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government are not yet in a position to announce the arrangements for payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances in 1991. This is because problems have arisen over the detailed implementation of a new EC ceiling on payments of 1·4 livestock units per hectare. Claim forms and explanatory leaflets will be issued to producers as quickly as possible, once these problems have been resolved. The Government are well aware of the importance of making the HLCA payments in the early part of the year and every effort will be made to ensure that payments commence quickly.

Fishing

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to implement the EC Council of Fisheries Ministers decision to have an eight consecutive days tie-up period in each month.

Mr. Curry: I expect implementing regulation to be laid before Parliament before the end of this month and to come into force on 1 February.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Product Liability Directive

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries have been received from the European Commission concerning the implementation by the United Kingdom of the 1985 EC product liability directive; what replies have been sent by his Department; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his earlier question on the same subject, Official Report, 19 December 1990, column 187. The position is unchanged.

Exhibitions

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the relative cost to British machinery manufacturers wishing to exhibit at international exhibitions abroad or arranging space bookings, stand building, etc. (a) directly with the exhibition and (b) through the governmental system.

Mr. Sainsbury: Under my Department's export initiative, companies participating as a British group at the overseas trade fair are provided with space, a shell stand and essential display aids at 50 per cent. of the estimated cost. Assistance towards the cost of travel is also available for group members exhibiting outside western Europe. This support is provided generally on three occasions in any one country.

No subsidy is available for independent exhibitors. Such companies negotiate the presentation standard they require with exhibition organisers and stand contractors.

Textile Industry

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the United Kingdom's relative position in world textile machinery exports in (a) 1970 and (b) 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information is readily available only for the OECD countries and in a form which includes leather working machinery. On this basis the United Kingdom was the second-largest OECD exporter of textile machines to world markets in 1970 and the seventh largest in 1988, the latest year for which data are obtainable.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what request his Department received to supply support to Camber International Ltd. of Leicester at the recent international textile manufacturing exhibition in China; what response was made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: On 23 February 1990 my Department formally offered to provide financial support to a group of British companies recruited by the British Textile Machinery Association to participate in this exhibition. An application from Camber International Ltd. to join the supported group was received early in May 1990. The association was informed on 10 May 1990 that the company was not eligible. This was because DTI trade fair assistance is restricted to three participations in any country, and Camber International had benefited from such support on three previous occasions in China.

The company subsequently appealed against the decision on the grounds that it had been subject of successive takeovers and that in its new form the company had not previously exhibited in China. The appeal was rejected because it was considered that the reconstituted company was still producing broadly the same range of equipment as had benefited from the previous supported exhibition participations in China.

United States Trade Act

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart concerning the so-called Super 301 provision of the United States Trade Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have taken frequent opportunities over the past two years to make clear to our United States counterparts our opposition to the provisions of the United States Trade Act which permit unilateral GATT-illegal action. Fortunately, the legislative authority permitting new actions under the "Super 301" provision has now time-expired.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with EEC countries on review of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, together with EC colleagues, attended the GATT ministerial meeting in Brussels last month which discussed, among other things, how best to phase out the multi-fibre arrangement as part of a general settlement of the Uruguay round, including the strengthening of GATT rules and disciplines. The Government hope that the talks, which were suspended over the question of agriculture, will soon reconvene.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a detailed breakdown of the £50 million reduction in central Government expenditure by his Department for 1991-92 as announced in the autumn statement as against the plans announced in the January 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Sainsbury: This information will be published next month in the new Trade and Industry departmental report.

TRANSPORT

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make all forms of public transport more accessible to people in wheelchairs.

Mr. Freeman: We are working on the development and introduction of low-floor buses that can accommodate wheelchair users on regular services. We hope to start trials of such vehicles later this year.

British Rail has already made considerable progress in making its rolling stock accessible. All new Intercity trains are accessible in both first and standard class carriages and are also fitted with accessible toilet facilities.

Access to public transport infrastructure is also being improved. Where new facilities are being provided, or when older ones are being refurbished, the public transport authorities are providing access wherever reasonably practicable.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to assist local authorities to lower pavement heights and kerbs to enable people in wheelchairs to move freely along main public thoroughfares and footpaths.

Mr. Freeman: In 1986, the Department issued advice to local authorities on the provision of dropped kerbs to help wheelchair users in conjunction with tactile surfaces to guide blind and partially sighted people at uncontrolled crossings.

We hope to issue similar advice for uncontrolled crossings and side streets shortly.

In both cases local authorities can install these facilities as part of their planned maintenance programmes.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will list the items of personal and vehicle information that will be transferred to the new police national computer; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) whether he received advice from, or had meetings with, the Data Protection Registrar before deciding upon the nature of the closer links between the DVLA and the new police national computer;

(3) whether he intends to inform drivers of the items of personal information they provide that could be transferred to the new police national computer; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: DVLA has for many years passed to the police national computer organisation descriptive vehicle information and the names and addresses of vehicle keepers. No changes are planned to these arrangements. The information released at present from the driver record relates specifically to details about drivers who are disqualified. As a result of recommendations made by the road traffic law review committee, it is planned that details of all drivers on the DVLA record will be provided to the police national computer during 1992.

The DVLA registrations under the Data Protection Act 1984 indicate that details from both the vehicle and driver registers are given to the police. The planned changes in the arrangements for providing additional details from the driver record do not require consultation with the Data Protection Registrar. The information on the police national computer facilitates law enforcement.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he proposes to ensure that the benefits of the channel tunnel are shared by people and industry in Swindon and the south-west.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has the statutory responsibility for planning and running rail services in the United Kingdom, including those which will use the channel tunnel. Its initial response to the recent proposal from the Transport Users Consultative Committee for western England for a major upgrading of the Reading-Ashford route for channel tunnel services to and from the west indicated that it is confident that its current plans for such services for 1993 will meet the needs of the west country.

Cycle Lanes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in descending order the London boroughs by proportion of cycle lanes to total highway in each borough.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available.

Speed Limits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has estimated the cost and if he has plans to provide additional finance to enable local authorities to introduce 20 mph speed limit zones in accordance with his Department's recent guidelines.

Mr. Chope: We estimate that a 20 mph speed limit zone can be introduced for as little as £50,000. Schemes are eligible for transport supplementary grant if they have a significant casualty reduction potential and can therefore be considered to be a local safety scheme. Over £31 million has been earmarked for local safety schemes within the minor works allocation of the 1991-92 TSG settlement.

A4/M4 Corridor Study

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive and publish the A4/M4 corridor study from his consultants.

Mr. Chope: I have not yet received the consultants' final report on this study. I intend to publish it as soon as possible after its receipt.

London Transport (Private Bills)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chairman of London Transport detailing the cost in each year of presenting Private Bills to Parliament since the inception of London Regional Transport, listing the Bills, the costs associated with them and the outcome.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for London Transport. I am asking the chairman to let the hon. Member have whatever information is readily available.

EMPLOYMENT

Economic Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing for the United Kingdom, France, Italy and Germany for the years 1979 to 1989 and 1985 to 1989 the change in the numbers for (i) unemployed, (ii) GDP, (iii) manufacturing output and (iv) employment.

Mr. Jackson: The information on unemployment and employment is contained in the following table. No figures are available for the unified Germany.

	Annual average
	United Kingdom (thousand)	France (thousand)	Italy (thousand)
Unemployment
Change 1979 to 1989	710	920	1,181
Change 1985 to 1989	−1,244	−161	485

	Annual average
	United Kingdom (thousand)	France (thousand)	Italy (thousand)
Civilian employment
Change 1979 to 1989	1,374	179	776
Change 1985 to 1989	2,243	569	325

Source: OECD "Labour Force Statistics 1968-1988" and "Quarterly Labour Force Statistics Number 4 1990" (except United Kingdom, Employment Department).

Data for manufacturing output for the United Kingdom are published by the Central Statistical Office in Economic Trends and for other EC countries by the OECD in its monthly publication "Main Economic Indicators". Levels of gross domestic product for OECD countries can be obtained in the OECD publications "National Accounts—Main Aggregates—Volumes 1 1960-1988", part 6, table 7 for 1979 figures; and from "Main Economic Indicators—December 1990", part 3, for 1985 and 1989 figures. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the constituencies in Britain with more than 5,000 unemployed; and how long each constituency has been in that position.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is contained in the following table.

Constituency name	Number of unemployed in December 1990 (not seasonally adjusted)	Number of months unemployment has been above 5,000
Tottenham	7,599	1
Manchester Central	7,505	1

[1] Unemployment has been above 5,000 throughout the period since parliamentary constituency data on unemployment first became available in June 1983.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the level of youth unemployment in Liverpool:

(2) what is the level of unemployment in Liverpool:

(3) what is the level of long-term unemployment in Liverpool:

Mr. Jackson: The latest available data are given in the table:

Unemployment (not seasonally adjusted) in Liverpool Travel-to-Work-Area

	Date	Number
Total number of unemployed claimants	December 1990	63,743
Number of unemployed claimants who have been unemployed for 12 months or more	October 1990	27,596
Number of unemployed claimants aged 18 to 24 years	October 1990	20,100

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Jackson: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Building Sites (Safety)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has given to the Transport and General Workers Union on the subject of health and safety on temporary and mobile building sites draft directive of the European Commission, Cm/90/275–SYN–Z79.

Mr. Forth: I have referred the letter in question to the Health and Safety Executive since I believe that this is a matter best dealt with by it. I understand that it will reply direct to the Transport and General Workers Union shortly.

Manufactured Mineral Fibres

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the dangers to workers of handling manufactured mineral fibres; and if he proposes to take any steps to reduce these dangers.

Mr. Forth: The health effects of man-made mineral fibres (MMMF) were reviewed in 1989 by the Health and Safety Commission's Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances. As a consequence of this review a maximum exposure limit of two fibres per millilitre of air has been set for MMMF in schedule 1 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 to supplement the already existing gravimetric MEL of 5 milligrammes per cubic metre. This additional MEL came into effect on 1 January 1991.

The COSHH Regulations specify the precautions which employers should take to prevent or adequately control exposure to hazardous substances, including MMMF. In addition, the Health and Safety Executive has recently published two guidance documents which give details of the specific measures which should be taken to reduce exposure to MMMF.

Restart Courses

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many organisations the Employment Service contracts to run Restart courses; how many Restart courses were organised within the last year by the Employment Service and how many by other organisations; what is the average cost of a Restart course run by the Employment Service and what is the average fee paid to other organisations that run Restart courses; what is the average length of a Restart course and what is the maximum length of such a course; how many participants on Restart courses fail to complete the course; what was the total amount paid to other organisations for running Restart courses within the last year; what is the average number of participants on Restart courses; how many people have participated on Restart courses within the last year; what are the basic aims and objectives of Restart courses; and how many unemployed claimants have been unemployed for more than two years.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive. I have therefore referred the hon. Gentleman's questions about Restart courses to him to reply. The lastest available figures published in October 1990 show that, in the United Kingdom, 305,110 unemployed claimants have been unemployed for two years or more.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Jackson: The time taken in preparing briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in the Employment Department. Estimates are, however, made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold, currently £250. However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972, in which the Employment Department participated, an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Jackson: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Health Personnel Pay Review Bodies

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of staff involved in servicing the review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration and on nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine; and what is the annual cost of running these bodies.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 14 January 1991]: A total of nine staff is involved in servicing the review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration and the review body for nurses, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine. The total annual cost of running these bodies in 1989-90, the latest figures available, was £472,623.

ENVIRONMENT

Underground Structures

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has maps of London and other major cities which reveal both the geology and the man-made services below the surface.

Mr. Yeo: My Department holds sets of published geological maps which cover all major cities including London. Sets of maps of man-made services below the ground are not held.

Opencast Coal Mining

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current guidance given by him to local planning authorities in respect of opencast coal applications.

Mr. Yeo: Current guidance on the matters to be taken into account by mineral planning authorities when considering planning applications for opencast coal mining is contained in minerals planning guidance note 3 "Opencast Coal Mining", published by HMSO in May 1988. Copies are available in the House Library.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all sites where a total quantity of 25 tonnes or more of dangerous substances are present, quoting the ordnance survey eight-figure grid reference number for each site.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not available in the format requested. Each Health and Safety Executive area office keeps available for public inspection lists of premises in its area, by name and address, where dangerous substances are present and where notification required under certain legislation has been received by the Health and Safety Executive.

Minerals Act

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the group to review the operation of the Minerals Act 1981 will be set up; and what the composition of the group will be.

Mr. Yeo: As announced in "This Common Inheritance", my officials are currently reviewing the operation of the provisions of the Minerals Act 1981. A small informal working group of planners and industry representatives is assisting in this.

Any proposals for change arising out of the work of the group will be subject to full consultation in the usual way.

Radioactive Discharges, Aldermaston

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all consents held by the Ministry of Defence establishment at Aldermaston to discharge radioactive substances to water or land.

Mr. Trippier: There is one approval issued to the Ministry of Defence establishment at Aldermaston under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to discharge radioactive substances to water and land. It covers the discharge of treated effluent to the River Thames at Pangbourne, discharge of trade waste into the sewers of Bradfield rural district council and disposal of solid radioactive waste by transfer to the Drigg disposal site in Cumbria operated by British Nuclear Fuels.

Haringey Council (Accounts)

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he will have with the Audit Commissioners to deal with the failure of the borough of Haringey for five successive years to produce its accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 January 1991]: I understand from the Audit Commission that the authority has held open its accounts for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 pending the resolution of legal matters, including the question of interest rate swaps, which have a possible bearing on those accounts. The accounts for 1987-88 have just been produced. The accounts for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90 are expected next month. It appears, therefore, that Haringey is at last taking action to produce its accounts for the years concerned.

HEALTH

Dialysis

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figures for the cost of maintaining a person on haemodialysis for a year within a hospital renal unit and on home dialysis; and what is the cost of providing CAPD over the same period.

Mr. Dorrell: No major study of costs has been made in recent years. The latest estimates, based on a study undertaken for the Department in 1983, are as follows:

Hospital haemodialysis	21,000
Home haemodialysis	17,000
CAPD	18,000

The figures are in 1989-90 prices and do not take account of changes in clinical practice since the study.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figure for the cost of a kidney transplant, heart lung transplant, lung transplant, liver transplant and transplants of other parts of the body; and if he will separately give the cost of the drug regime required to sustain the transplant within the human body on an annual basis.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of organ transplantation varies between units and according to the complexity of the case. The figures represent the latest estimate of the likely range of costs involved in 1989-90 prices;

Hearts between £15,000 and £20,000
Livers between £20,000 and £30,000
Kidney around £10,000

No estimate is available of the cost of other organs.

Information is not collected centrally of the annual cost of the drug regime required to sustain organ transplants.

Hepatitis A

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of hepatitis A cases confirmed in schools during the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No information on the number of hepatitis A cases confirmed in schools is held separately. However, the total number of cases of hepatitis A in school-age children in England and Wales reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre (CDSC) of the public health laboratory service for the year 1990 was 2,518 (provisional figures).

All outbreaks are reported in the communicable disease report of the CDSC. Local consultants in communicable disease control are responsible for monitoring outbreaks and advising appropriate control measures.

Meningitis

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of meningitis there have been in the last six months; what was the figure for the equivalent period last year; and to what factors he attributes the change.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the overall figures for both meningitis and meningococcal meningitis.

Notifications reported to OPCS—England and Wales
(All data are provisional)

	Last 6 months 1990	Last 6 months 1989
Meningitis (all forms)	1,105	1,194
Meningococcal meningitis	369	470
Deaths[1]	55	96

[1] Deaths assigned to meningococcal infection.

It is not yet clear whether the small decline in numbers represents a new trend, reversing the upsurge which began in 1986, nor to what it might be attributable. The position is being monitored closely.

Diabetics

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will enable diabetics to be supplied with needles for the Novopen on prescription through the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: National health service supply arrangements for insulin pens and needles need to be considered together. Subject to our normal evaluation of individual brands, we would consider making pens and needles prescribable, as an alternative to syringes, if this could be done without additional cost. Discussions with suppliers are currently in progress.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical personnel and in what categories are being called upon to serve in Her Majesty's forces in the Gulf; and what assessment has been made of the effect on the quality of service and waiting lists in (a) Sunderland, (b) Durham and (c) Hartlepool.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply of my hon. Friend the Minister for Health to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 14 January at column 415. No assessment has been made centrally of the impact on individual health authorities. We expect that all emergency cases will continue to be treated normally and that any effect on the treatment of non-emergency cases from waiting lists will be limited and short-lived.

Plymouth Health Authority

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a table showing the waiting lists in the Plymouth health authority area, by hospital, for the surgical, orthopaedic, ear, nose and throat, eye and neurology specialties, for January, April, June, September and December of the current year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is available only quarterly and is not collected centrally for individual hospitals. The latest available information for Plymouth health authority is given in the table.

Specialty	June 1989	September 1989	December 1989	March 1990
General surgery	1,027	1,093	1,093	1,098
Trauma and orthopaedics	1,129	1,086	1,231	1,223
Ear, nose and throat	1,116	1,116	1,069	945
Ophthalmology	616	631	549	431
Neurology	25	43	44	41

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examination he has undertaken of the observance by Plymouth health authority of the procedures governing competitive tendering and the award of contracts in respect of the contract for the lease of its transport fleet.

Mr. Dorrell: None. I am advised that the current contract for the provision of leased cars to Plymouth health authority has been extended to March 1991 to enable the authority to link with Cornwall health authority in a joint tendering exercise to achieve improved value for money. That exercise is being carried out in full accordance with the standing orders of the health authorities concerned, and is subject to independent statutory audit.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will provide a table showing the quarterly spending on office refurbishment and equipment for 1989-90 and 1990-91 by Plymouth health authority;

(2) if he will provide a table showing what moneys have been paid by Plymouth health authority to private nursing homes and other organisations not directly accountable to the authority for each year 1988-89 to 1990-91, inclusive.

Mr. Dorrell: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Vernon Seccombe, the chairman of Plymouth health authority, for details.

Elderly People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 6 December, Official Report, column 174, he will make a further statement on the action programme in favour of the elderly.

Mr. Dorrell: On 26 November 1990 the Social Affairs Council reached a decision for a Community action programme for the elderly in the employment, social security and health areas. The action programme will concentrate on: the exchange of information and experience; the establishment of a monitoring centre; and consideration of the feasibility and usefulness of establishing a network of innovative experiences.

A European Year of the Elderly was proposed for 1993.

Social Work Students

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is taking to ensure that adequate funding is available to social work agencies taking practice students on placement;

(2) what action he is taking to rectify the shortfall in practice placements for social work students;

(3) what action he is taking to ensure that enough qualified social work practice teachers are available by 1995 to meet directives of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Employers in the personal social services are responsible for ensuring that they have adequate numbers of suitably qualified staff. In consequence they have a primary interest in providing high-quality practice experience for social work students. We recognise that it is important to secure this provision and, to this end, we shall shortly be announcing a new initiative aimed at assisting employers to boost the supply of practice teachers and placements as part of a wider training strategy for the personal social services.

Nurses (Grading Appeals)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many grading appeals have been received by nurses employed by the Mersey region; what is the average time taken in dealing with an appeal; how many are still outstanding; and when it is anticipated all appeals will have been heard.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of health service funds were spent on providing facilities for breast cancer screening for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government began setting up a comprehensive breast screening programme in 1987.

The proportion of health service funds spent on providing facilities for breast screening in England for each financial year since 1987 is:

	Total NHS Funds (Gross) £ million	Cost of Breast Cancer Screening £ million	Percentage of Total Funds
1987-88	17,657	5·894	0·03
1988-89	19,604	18·182	0·09
1989-90	21,147	31·834	0·15
1990-91	23,687	25·573	0·10

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the hospitals in England and Wales which provide full facilities for the screening of breast cancer and the total number of patients screened for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. The Government began setting up a comprehensive breast screening programme in 1987. The service is provided mainly on a supra-district basis and not every screening centre is based at a hospital. Mobile screening units and static units not based in hospitals are also used. The table shows a list of districts in which breast screening services are based.

Available figures show that from April 1988 to March 1990, in England, Scotland and Wales, 304,952 women were screened. These figures apply only to the centres with data for full years and therefore do not reflect our overall activity in breast screening.

DEFENCE

Hospital Beds (Service Personnel)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his meetings with Scottish health authorities about beds for wounded service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the contingency plans for provision of treatment for casualties from the Gulf, discussions have been held at official level with the NHS management executive for health in Scotland. Scottish facilities will be available as required.

Boeing AWACS

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of the orders placed with British firms under the Boeing AWACS offset arrangements.

Mr. Alan Clark: Boeing has to date submitted seven progress reports listing contracts placed with United Kingdom companies to the value of $1,586 million, of which we have so far agreed that $1,149 million should count for offset—now referred to as industrial participation—credit purposes.

Service Personnel (Meals)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each armed service and by operational area and region the average weekly cost of providing meals for service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current average weekly cost of public funded food is set out in the table:

Theatre	Army £	RAF £	Royal Navy £	Total £
United Kingdom	655,200	353,808	175,812	1,184,820

Public Relations

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what public relations, public affairs or marketing companies are advising him; on what basis they were appointed; what is the cost, tenure and nature of their appointment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD does not employ any public relations, public affairs or marketing companies to act as advisors. On occasion, companies are retained on a specific contract basis to assist with the production of films, exhibitions and publications and with attitude surveys and market research. In these instances they always work to strict specifications drawn up and controlled by departmental officials.

RAF Nimrods

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum runway length required for United Kingdom airfields designated as planned diversionary airfields on training sorties by RAF Nimrods.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figure is 6,000 ft.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the expected total cost of the refurbishment of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Whitehall.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total expected cost, on a cash basis, spread over 18 years, is £98 million.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details for each year from 1980 to 1990 of the number of people applying for entry clearance certificates both for a temporary visit and for permanent settlement at British High Commissions in (a) Jamaica, (b) Barbados, (c) Trinidad and Tobago and (d) Guyana and the numbers refused a certificate.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number applying for visitor entry clearances at the four posts, with the number refused, is as follows:

	Jamaica		Barbados
	Applied	Refused	Applied	Refused
1983	4,247	297	3,342	n/a

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes.

Baltic States

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Soviet Government on their military intervention in the Baltic states and other republics; whether he proposes to raise the situation within the CSCE process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Soviet forces' actions in Vilnius and the threats made against the other Baltic states are unacceptable, and we deeply deplore their tragic consequences. We have expressed our concerns to the Soviet authorities in the strongest terms. The Twelve have also said that the use of force and threats in the Baltic states is unacceptable and have made it clear that economic assistance to the Soviet Union cannot continue on any basis other than shared values and objectives. EC aid will not be implemented if military repression in Lithuania is prolonged or extended to the other Baltic states.

Soviet actions in Lithuania contravene the Soviet Union's commitments under the Paris charter. We call on the Soviet authorities to honour their obligations under the charter and their other international commitments. We have raised the question of Lithuania in the CSCE meeting on the peaceful settlement of disputes at Valletta, and are considering what further action can be taken in the CSCE framework.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline and present, in detail, an appraisal of the effectiveness of United Nations sanctions against Iraq, the areas judged to require further action in order to tighten and improve their effectiveness and the time scale over which agreed objectives could be achieved in bringing such pressure to bear on the imports and exports from Iraq, so as to fully isolate the regime and cripple its economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The overall test of the effectiveness of sanctions is whether they persuade Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait. After five months there is no evidence that sanctions alone will reverse Saddam Hussein's policy. They have so far caused no serious disruptions in the Iraqi economy.

Above all, sanctions have had a negligible effect on Iraqi military capability. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said in the House on 15 January, they are unlikely to achieve such a decisive rundown of Saddam Hussein's military machine that he will leave Kuwait.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the names of those countries breaking the trading embargo with Iraq;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those countries in receipt of British overseas aid known to have broken the trading embargo on Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We co-operate closely with the Governments of friendly countries exchanging information about the practical implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 661, and have alerted them when we have had information that their companies might be engaged in violations. Any such approach has been made in confidence. It is the responsibility of the United Nations sanctions committee to take action on sanctions violations.

Cyprus

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he is giving to British subjects, in the light of the Gulf crisis, who are either resident in Cyprus or intending to travel there for business or tourist reasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We see no reason for visitors to Cyprus to change their plans in the light of developments in the Gulf. We have not considered it necessary to give specific advice to the British community in Cyprus. We are keeping the situation under close review.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report those countries in receipt of British overseas aid known to manufacture and export to other countries chemical or biological weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Only Iraq, the Soviet Union and the United States of America have publicly acknowledged possession of chemical weapons. None of these is in receipt of British overseas aid, although a know-how fund for the Soviet Union has been announced. No country has publicly admitted to the possession of biological weapons. It is not our practice to comment on the detailed information available to us about countries suspected of manufacturing, or exporting, chemical or biological weapons.

SCOTLAND

Harbours

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the total amount contributed by his Department to harbour improvement projects in each year since 1984-85; and if he will detail the distribution of the total sum in each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1984-85 the grants paid by the Scottish Office for harbour and pier projects have been as follows:

Sub-standard Housing

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what material assistance he intends to give to the residents of 1265 Pollokshaws road, Glasgow, who have bought houses which have subsequently been defined by building societies as being sub-standard and which cannot be resold; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As I have explained to the hon. Member in our previous correspondence, the Government are under no direct obligation to provide public resources to assist the owners of this property. I have, however, written further to the hon. Member about these houses, on which I understand that the district council is now prepared to make an offer of repair grant.

Scottish Natural Heritage Agency

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the relevant bodies which were consulted before the appointment to the board of the Scottish Natural Heritage Agency under section IIIb of the consultation paper "Scotland's Natural Heritage: The Way Ahead"; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Appointments to the board of Scottish Natural Heritage will be made later in the year. My right hon. Friend will be willing to consider nominations from relevant bodies.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects a decision to be taken over the location of the headquarters of the new Scottish Natural Heritage Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The location of the headquarters will be decided following receipt of advice from management consultants who are about to report on the locational, staffing and organisation options for SNH.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of additional staff which will be required by the proposed Scottish Natural Heritage Agency; and whether any additional funding for this purpose will be met out of the existing conservation budget.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 January 1991]: Staff numbers for Scottish Natural Heritage will be decided following receipt of advice from management consultants who are about to report on the locational, staffing and organisation options for SNH.

Decisions about the resources for Scottish Natural Heritage will be taken within the timetable and context of the annual public expenditure survey.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Records

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the terms of reference of the scrutiny committee studying public access to criminal records; whether the Data Protection Registrar is involved with the committee's activities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Home Secretary to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 28 November 1990 at column 418. The Data Protection Registrar has been invited to put views to the scrutiny team.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a summary of the cases in which compelling and compassionate circumstances were deemed relevant in his handling of immigration cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1990, Official Report, columns 490-91, regarding the work of the Crown prosecution service and the police, if he will make a further statement on his consideration of the working party's proposals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The working group's report has been discussed by senior officials of the Home Office, the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Crown prosecution service. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General will shortly be considering their proposals as to how the recommendations contained in that report should be taken forward.

Overseas Students

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many students from overseas undertaking full or part-time education return after their course is completed; and of those who remain how many eventually qualify for residence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. Our information on embarkations, and on people accepted for settlement, does not comprehensively identify all those admitted as students.

Crime

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each of the 43 police forces of England and Wales the number of scenes of crime officers employed and the percentage of crimes cleared up for the most recent 12-month period.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures for the number of scenes of crime officers employed show the position at 31 December 1989, and the percentage of crimes cleared up refers to the whole of 1989. These are the most recent figures available.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures he proposes for the maintenance of the existing level of magistrates' judicial independence within the magistrates courts system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has to ensure continuance of existing magistrates courts clerks' practice to offer unbiased legal advice to members of their benches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 17 January 1991]: It is of fundamental importance that the magistrates courts must remain independent of Government in respect of judicial decision-making and that justices' clerks, in giving advice to their magistrates for this purpose, should act on the basis of their knowledge and understanding of the law and of their duty to provide expert and independent advice. In considering any options for changes to the service, whether drawn from the report of the scrutiny of that service or elsewhere, we shall exclude arrangements which do not effectively maintain the independence of magistrates and their clerks at least at its present level.

ENERGY

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to respond to the letter of Dr. John Cox of Wednesday 9 January on environmental consequences of the Gulf war.

Mr. Moynihan: A reply will be sent shortly.

Computers (Security)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures he is taking to ensure the security of (a) his Department's computers in-house and (b) lap-top personal computers when used by his civil servants outside his Department's offices.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not Government policy to disclose details of the protective security measures for safeguarding computers used for official purposes. To do so would be of assistance to potential attackers and therefore reduce the effectiveness of the measures. These measures are kept under review.

Low-energy Light Bulbs

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will include low-energy light bulbs in his current advertising campaign aimed at promoting domestic energy efficiency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The current domestic energy efficiency advertising campaign emphasises the improvements in insulation which can be made to older existing housing and explains that such improvements can improve comfort, reduce fuel bills and help to reduce carbon dioxide emissions.

The advertisements are designed to encourage readers to send off for the Energy Efficiency Office's new booklet pack entitled "Energy in Your Home". The first of these booklets, "The Energy Friendly Home", contains a section explaining the benefits of low-energy light bulbs.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what compensation he intends for applicants for electricity distributor shares where applicants, through no fault of their own, were classified as non-priority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department will look into any cases where it is suggested that there may have been an error in the treatment of a particular application. I will then consider the appropriate action.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average length of time taken and the average cost involved of officials' time in his Department preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions.

Mr. Wakeham: The time taken in preparing ministerial briefs for oral parliamentary questions is not routinely recorded in my Department. Estimates are, however, made where there is a likelihood of exceeding the disproportionate cost threshold, currently £250. However, following an interdepartmental exercise in 1972 an assessment was made of the average cost throughout all Departments of answering an oral question. This assessment was based on staff time, using average rates of pay and associated costs for the grades concerned, together with a share of the cost of parliamentary sections and any substantial non-staff costs such as computer usage. This assessed figure is regularly updated and currently stands at £99.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what savings his Department would make were no notice given of oral questions to Ministers and they were answered without civil service time being used on briefings.

Mr. Wakeham: No savings would be made and costs would almost certainly increase significantly. If the oral question is known in advance briefing can be tightly focused, thus avoiding the cost of producing a detailed brief, covering all subjects that could possibly arise.

Oil Supplies

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action, in the light of commencement of hostilities in the Gulf, is being taken to ensure that oil supplies are maintained.

Mr. Wakeham: The IEA gave notification yesterday morning, 17 January, that the contingency plan agreed last Friday 11 January is now being activated. Member countries agreed that in the event of hostilities in the Gulf they would make available to the market an additional 2·5 million barrels of oil per day through a combination of stockdraw, demand restraint and other measures. The United Kingdom share is 120,000 barrels per day and will come from stocks held by the oil companies.

There are ample supplies at present. This action provides further reassurance that if shortages occur, additional supplies will be available.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 183

SESSION 1990–91

17th December 1990—18th January, 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
